

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

EDITORIAL.

The coming June, 1905, will mark the fifteenth anniversary of the foundation of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association. During the winter of 1890-91 certain public-spirited graduates met together to consider the advisability of forming such an Association, and on June 23, 1891, the first annual meeting was held, a constitution was adopted, and the Association fairly launched on its mission to "advance the cause of medical education, to promote the interests and increase the usefulness of the Harvard Medical School, and to promote acquaintance and good fellowship among the members of the Association." What measure of success has been attained in these objects must be credited to the efforts of those who have actively served it and to the support of the members at large. Any measure of failure is due to the indifference of more than one-half of the graduate body of the Harvard Medical School, who have never become members.

In every organization and community, whether of bees or men, there always exist the two great classes of workers and drones, the one striving for some useful end according to its lights, the other willing to reap what advantage it may from the labors of the first without effort of its own, or lying back in self-contemplative lethargy, asking only to be let alone. A small and devoted group of men are spending time and thought without material reward in promoting the interests of the Medical School through this Association, and they deserve the support of every graduate.

Graduates who have been asked to join have met us by the query, "What do we get out of it?" It is easy to reply that for the modest sum of one dollar per year the graduate becomes associated with a body of men banded together to promote the interests of their Alma Mater; receives every three or four months a publication containing news of the School, of methods of teaching, of the careers of graduates, and articles or addresses suitable for publication; receives the right to participate in the annual meeting in June, to partake of a collation afterward, to frequent a convenient room in the yard at Cambridge on Commencement Day and appease his hunger and thirst; and, finally, to attend triennially a dinner of the Association and listen to the words of better men than he. But all this should be secondary. The query should be, not "What can I get out of it?" but, rather, "What can I put into it?" Every consideration, save the sordid ones of pure self-interest, should enlist the devotion of the Alumnus to the Alma Mater who has educated him, and set the seal of her approval on his accomplishment. The man who has no goal save money and material advantage, in whose bosom the spirit of loyalty, the pleasure of associations and of sentiment, find no place, will find little satisfaction in membership in this Association.

Our Medical School, on the eve of great material expansion, in transition from a lower to a higher scheme of education, which is bound to cost her heavily in students and in income, needs the active support of the graduate body. Let each graduate remember that his professional stock in trade, his reputation for learning and ability, is inseparably linked with that of the School whose diploma he bears; that, as her name is famous and her reputation fair, so are his knowledge and skill as a physician proportionately guaranteed to the community in which he lives.

The announcement of the Summer School for 1905, just issued, exhibits a wealth of opportunity for students and practitioners to review the field of medicine, to inform themselves about and to practise new methods of diagnosis either at the bedside or in the laboratory, to learn the latest advances in treatment, or to pursue original study and investigation in any special department. Graduates of more than ten years' standing can scarcely realize the abundance of clinical material available for study: the wards, out-patient departments, and laboratories of the Boston City, Massachusetts General, Carney, Children's, Infants', and Long Island Hospitals, and of the

During the past five years the attendance at the Summer School has not materially increased, as is shown by the accompanying table:—

Courses taken	167	151	145	188	177
Students	149	126	130	148	135

A much greater number of students could be accommodated without overtaxing the facilities for instruction, although certain well-known courses are yearly filled to their limit. The experience of last year showed that carefully arranged groups of courses, embracing a number of allied subjects do not commend themselves to the average student, who usually prefers to study some specific branch or acquaint himself with the advances in some special subject rather than to review a broader field. Nevertheless, it will be found that many courses which might be advantageously combined are so arranged that they do not conflict as to time or place.

It is worth while to call attention to the fact that courses on the cadaver have been largely robbed of the disagreeable features formerly associated with the hot weather. A preservative injection has been gradually perfected in the Anatomical Department which prevents putrefactive changes for an astonishingly long time, even in the hottest weather, and permits of practical work in anatomy without discomfort to the student. There is every reason to believe, also, that there will be an abundance of material during the summer of 1905.

We have received with pleasure from Dr. Horace Binney, secretary of the class of 1901, Harvard Medical School, a first report of that class in pamphlet form, containing the names and addresses of 116 members, together with brief sketches of their professional careers since graduation. This class before graduation, effected a permanent organization, elected a secretary and class committee, subscribed a sum of money as the nucleus of a class fund, and expressed the desire to hold occasional reunions. It is proposed that the first reunion shall be held this year, and take the form of a dinner in Boston during the exercises of the Massachusetts Medical Society. We trust that this is but the beginning of the renewal of many pleasant associations formed during the four years of study in the School, and we commend the example of the class of 1901 as one worthy of imitation by others.

The Caroline Brewer Croft Cancer Commission, working under the endowment lately left to the Harvard Medical School for the investigation of the cause of cancer, has lately published its third annual report under the direction of Dr. Edward H. Nichols, Assistant Professor of Surgical Pathology. In this report Dr. F. B. Mallory writes on the "Classification of Tumors," Dr. R. B. Greenough on the "Nature of the Cell Inclusions in Cancer," Drs. Robert H. Vose and Walter C. Howe on the "Effects of the Röntgen Ray upon Cancer," and Dr. Nichols on the "Implantations of Tissue and its Relation to Cancer." Dr. Nichols's conclusions are of the greatest significance, and are briefly as follows:—

(1) Certain types of epithelium (epidermis), both adult and foetal, can be experimentally removed from their normal position and implanted into another part of the same animal, and under those circumstances can maintain their "potentiality of growth," retain their own peculiar character, and produce nodules analogous to dermoid cysts or more complicated teratomata.

(2) In no case has any epithelium of a highly differentiated function been seen to maintain its power of growth or to proliferate.

(3) The "potentiality of growth" is greater in the case of foetal than it is in that of adult tissues.

(4) In no case has any infiltration of surrounding tissue of the transplanted epithelium been seen, nor any tendency to epithelial metastases.

(5) Certain foetal connective tissues (cartilage) can be transplanted in the same way as epithelial tissues, and retain their "potentiality of growth."

(6) Transplanted foetal tissues do not reproduce the stage of development at which they are transplanted, but tend to reproduce the ultimate stage of their normal development.

The Boston Medical and Surgical Journal of March 23, 1905, comments in part as follows on the report:—

"In general, therefore, it may be seen that at present the opinion of the Cancer Commission of the Harvard Medical School is one of extreme scepticism regarding the recent claims made by certain students of the subject. The work leading to these conclusions has been most carefully done, and must unquestionably be given much weight in a final determination of the question. On the whole, the attitude of the Harvard investigators has been one of increasing discouragement in relation to the protozoön origin of the disease."

THE STILLMAN INFIRMARY.

BY CLARENCE JOHN BLAKE, M.D.

Where there are large numbers of adolescent young men gathered together for a term of years under the control of an educational institution, it is a reasonable proposition that the authorities of that institution should not only supervise the living conditions of the students in health, but also make some provision for their supervision and care in case of sickness.

To meet the demands of this proposition, Harvard College established a Department of Medical Visitation, and has provided two buildings constituting the infirmary, or hospital, of the college, which are, under supervision of the Medical Visitor, devoted to the care of sick students.

The provision of these buildings, one for contagious and one for non-contagious cases, was made possible through the generosity of Mr. James Stillman of New York, whose sole conditions attached to his gifts, amounting in all to $175,000, were that the college infirmary should be adequate to its uses and that it should bear his name.

The Stillman Infirmary, therefore, is intended for the use of such students of Harvard College as may, in the event of sickness during their college course, have need of its services, and is in all respects, both as to construction and equipment, the best college hospital as yet established in this country.

The exterior design of the main building is in the Italian Georgian or Colonial style, frequently used for hospital work, as it gives great regularity and symmetry with large and frequent window openings. The walls above the basement are of rough water-struck brick, and the trimmings of limestone with carved cornice and pilaster caps.

Generally speaking, the outside appearance of the building is generous and dignified without losing the simplicity which is the keynote of the older buildings of Harvard University.

For the accommodation of patients the building contains nine private rooms and two wards; for the accommodation of the matron, nurses, and servants there are an office, bedroom, and bath-room for the matron, and nine bedrooms for the nurses, janitor, and servants.

The basement, above ground on two sides and lighted by large windows and with an entrance at level on the easterly end of the building, contains a large and commodious kitchen and laundry, serving-room, servants' dining-room, refrigerator room, store-rooms, and the heating and ventilating plant.

Situated on Mt. Auburn Street, Cambridge, overlooking the Parkway, the adjacent grounds of the Cambridge Hospital, Charles River, and the Soldiers' Field, the surroundings of the Infirmary are most attractive, and the location well adapted to hospital purposes, affording abundant air and sunshine and permanent isolation from other buildings.

The land belonging to the Infirmary, as originally acquired from the Cambridge Hospital, extends from Mt. Auburn Street to the Parkway bordering the Charles River, and carried with it an option on adjoining land since availed of in the construction of contagious wards and free from restrictions as to its use in the care of contagious diseases.

The general plan of the building is rectangular, of four stories above the basement, with corridors running lengthwise of the building and terminating at the east end in an iron and slate staircase which runs from the basement to the top of the building, independent of the main staircase of iron and marble running from the first floor, at the left of the front entrance, to the fourth or top floor. Further provision is made for communication between the floors, and especially for the transportation of patients, by means of an elevator shaft running from the basement to the top story, the elevator for which is not yet installed.

The main entrance, on Mt. Auburn Street, is across a stone terrace above the street level, through a double door into a vestibule and entrance hall opening on the right into the office and matron's suite, on the left into the main staircase hall. In the rear, double doors lead into the corridor, from which access is had to a small operating-room, with sterilizing-room attached, and to three large single bedrooms which may be used for operative cases, or, in the event of critical illness making the presence of members of the patient's family desirable, as guest chambers. These rooms all have a southern exposure. On the north side the corridor affords a private entrance to the matron's rooms, and gives access to the diet kitchen and to a small dining-room for patients and nurses.

The floors of the first story, with the exception of the entrance hall, which is of marble, are finished in a fire-proof material called asbestolith, put on in a pliable condition and turned up at junction with the walls and at all corners, giving a smooth, water-proof finish. The same material is also used for the floors of the serving-rooms throughout the building. The inside walls of the corridors, rooms, and wards, are finished in hard cement plaster with rounded corners; and the doors, which are double for the patients' rooms, are of oak, smooth finish, without panels, and with rounded edges and settings. On the second, third, and fourth stories the floor finish is in hard pine.

The second and third stories are intended for patients. The floor plan is the same in both, and the distribution of space gives, at the west end of the building, a large ward capable of accommodating ten beds, with a cubic air space of over fourteen hundred feet per patient. On the south side of the corridor the space is divided into separate rooms, each with about twenty-five hundred cubic feet of air space, while on the north side are the toilets, baths, the staircase and elevator wells, and the serving-rooms, connected with the kitchen serving-room in the basement by means of dumb waiters. The fourth story is intended for the accommodation of nurses and servants, and is divided into separate rooms, three of which are large enough for two beds. On the north side are two separate bath-rooms and toilets which, like the bath-rooms and toilets throughout the building, are floored and wainscoted in white marble.

The planning of the fourth floor is such that, in case of necessity, it could be used for patients, the nurses and domestics being provided for elsewhere, in which event, with ten beds in each ward, two beds in five of the larger single rooms, and the fourth floor used for patients, the hospital accommodation of the Infirmary could be increased from twenty-nine to forty-five beds, with one thousand cubic feet of air space per patient, which, in consideration of the excellent system of heating and ventilating, would be sufficient. By this system the outdoor air is first filtered by being drawn through forty-two cloth bags, each a foot in diameter and nine feet in length, passed between steam radiators and driven over the building through conduits by a seven-foot fan, there being, in addition, a provision for so mixing the hot and cold air that sufficient ventilation may be at all times afforded without excessive heat. All of the rooms have either fireplaces or registers opening into conduits. In the wards there are both, and there is, therefore, ample provision for the exit of foul air. The halls and serving-rooms are, in addition, heated by the direct hot-water method or by steam, if preferred, two horizontal tubular boilers supplying steam for heating purposes, and a third upright boiler supplying steam for the laundry and kitchen.

The laundry and kitchen are fully equipped with all necessary appliances, and are, together with the heating plant, equal to the demands of a much larger building, having been intentionally so designed in order to be able to furnish heat, laundry service, and cooking for contagious wards in addition to the main building.

The equipment of the building as to bedsteads, furniture, and supplies is of the best quality throughout. The bedsteads and other furniture are mostly of special design, and the beds are all supplied with pillows, blankets, and covers ready for use.

Under the administration of the Infirmary, sick students who are able to pay for nursing and medical attendance, and who have heretofore remained in their rooms in Cambridge or gone to private hospitals or to the Massachusetts General or the Cambridge Hospital as private patients, now have the advantage of going to the Infirmary at equivalent expense, with the further advantage of being in an institution the property of and controlled by the college, and in which, moreover, ample provision is made for the accommodation of the parents or guardians of any student so seriously ill as to make such presence desirable; paying patients in the Infirmary are entitled to employ medical advice of their own choice at their own cost; patients unable to pay are entitled to the medical service already supplied without cost to the students of the college.

Since its opening in October, 1902, the Infirmary has amply demonstrated its value for the purpose for which it was intended.

In the first year, 1902-03, there were in the wards of the Infirmary 134 patients, and in the private rooms 89 patients,—a total of 223 patients for the college year.

In the second year, 1903-04, there were in the wards 173 patients, and in private rooms 117 patients,—a total of 290 patients for the college year.

The duration of Infirmary treatment ranged from one day to two months, with exception of one case of protracted illness, admitted May 15, 1903, and discharged Nov. 11, 1903, necessitating the maintenance of the Infirmary during the three summer months, when it would otherwise have been closed.

The value of the Infirmary for the purpose of such preventive treatment as is afforded by rest, seclusion, diet, and nursing, is shown by the short duration of stay of many of the patients and by the increasing willingness of the students to resort to the Infirmary for what they need in this respect, this tendency being furthered by the student assessment of four dollars a year, in effect Sept. 29, 1904, under which the student assessed is entitled to two weeks of Infirmary service during the current year, free of charge.

The more serious cases of illness, requiring prolonged stay in the Infirmary, have been pneumonia, typhoid, and appendicitis, the needs of which have been amply met by the general equipment of the Infirmary and the excellent nursing afforded.

Of the 17 cases of appendicitis in the first year, 9 came to operation, and there was no death; in the second year there were 18 cases, with 10 operations and 2 deaths. In these, as in cases of injury requiring operation, the value of the equipment of the central room, on the first floor, as an operating-room was satisfactorily demonstrated.

That the Infirmary is an effective factor in the important work of the Medical Visitor of the college, and that it also commands the approval of the medical profession at large, is evidenced not only by the commendations of its services received, but by the admission statistics, which show that in the first year 48 of the cases in the Infirmary were treated by the college Medical Visitor and 175 by other physicians not connected with the college, while in the second year 77 were treated by the college Medical Visitor and 213 by other physicians.

Heretofore cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria occurring among the students have been admitted to the contagious wards of the Cambridge Hospital and the Board of Health Hospital, but, as no hospital in either Cambridge or Boston will admit measles or mumps, it has been necessary to care for such cases among the students in their rooms, for the most part in dormitories, where the inconveniences have been great and the possible comforts, in sickness, few.

The following statistics serve to emphasize the importance of this branch of the provision for student welfare:—

	1895-96.	1896-97.	1897-98.	1898-99.	1899-1900.
Measles	21	47	19	48	106
Mumps	20	11	95	2	44
Scarlet fever	2	4	2	0	3
Diphtheria	3	2	5	0	5
Total.	46	64	121	50	158

	1900-01.	1901-02.	1902-03.	1903-04.
Measles	1	42	7	75
Mumps	66	3	12	28
Scarlet Fever	4	2	7	7
Diphtheria	12	4	7	12
Total	83	51	33	122

The yearly average of contagious cases, exclusive of chicken-pox, usually a mild and infrequent disease among students and of which no records were kept at Harvard up to the year 1899, is 80. The ability to avail of the new isolation wards now completed is warmly welcomed.

To adequately carry out the plan for a contagious department of the Infirmary, to remove it sufficiently from the main building, and to install, without the walls of the main building, the laundry facilities required, necessitated the acquisition of the additional land provided for under the original agreement by which the land for the main building was acquired.

The Contagious Ward Building is Georgian in design, like the older buildings at Harvard, and comports in its exterior aspect with that of the main building, the walls of the first story being of stone and of the upper stories of brick, with stone window sills, lintels, and corners.

The building is connected with the main Infirmary by a covered passage leading to the main entrance on the first floor. This passage forms a quarter of the curve of a circle. Adjacent to it is the laundry, with washers, extractor, washing trays, mangle, folding table, dryer, and ironing tables. The machines are run by shafting connected with an electric motor.

Over the passage is a curved colonnade, roofed over and open at the sides, leading to the main entrance of the second floor; and adjoining the main building is a sun-room and smoking-room for convalescents.

The first floor of the building contains, besides the laundry above described, toilets, bath-room, locker-room, and pantry, an isolation-room, linen-room, duty-room, and bedroom, in addition to which there is a large, well-lighted, well-ventilated ward, holding ten beds for patients. This room is open on three sides, giving views over both the river and the park, which borders it on both sides.

The second and third floors are identical in plan with the first, each having the large ward towards Charles River, with the smaller rooms towards Mt. Auburn Street.

The basement is devoted almost wholly to heating and ventilating the building. The steam is brought in from the heating plant in the main building, to heat air which circulates therefrom through the wards above. The attic is used for bath and bed rooms.

Shepley, Rutan & Coolidge, who designed the original building, are also the architects of the new Contagious Ward.

In effect, the Stillman Infirmary, with its recent addition, is not only a complete hospital plant, but it is also the most complete plant for its especial purpose.

The payment of its running expenses is at present assured by a student assessment, by the charges for private rooms, and by the income from a moderate fund "for the care of sick students." Complete as is the building itself, its purpose is still open to endowment, and this may be made either in the form of specified funds or by the establishment of memorial beds.

MEDICAL PRACTICE IN COLORADO IN 1859.

BY GEORGE W. TOWAR, M.D. 1858.

My life for the past twenty years has been of the humdrum sort, and not in touch with scientific medicine.

I graduated from Harvard Medical School in 1858 with seventeen others.

I have often wondered if the old Grove Street School has since had in its Faculty men the equal of those there then,—Holmes, Bigelow, Storer, Ware, Shattuck, Clarke, Jackson, and Bowditch. They have all left their mark on the medicine of their day, and, I presume, have all been gathered to their fathers.

I went to Denver, Col., in 1859, and there was not a house, commercial or residential, completed on June 6, on my arrival. Houses and stores were going up in every direction, and there were from one to two thousand tents to be seen from any elevated point on the town site. The only completed structure where business was being done was "Denver Hall," which was a great big enclosure sided up with logs and covered with canvas. It gave shelter to twenty or twenty-five gambling tables and a liquor bar about one hundred feet long on one side, over which white-aproned gentry were dispensing "Pike's Peak" bitters as fast as ever they could handle tumblers.

Horace Greeley made a trip to Denver in one of the first of the "Overland and Pike's Peak" coaches, and was there at that time. He made a speech in Denver Hall one evening on the wealth and prospects of the mountain country. The hall was crowded to suffocation with gamblers, drinkers, and miners, and, as the canvas roof hardly deadened the sound of his voice, the hall was surrounded by several thousand more on the outside, to hear the Tribune philosopher.

I was approached, soon after arriving, by one of the incorporators of the town anxious to sell me some lots on one or more of the chief business streets, suggesting a doctor's office or drug store, etc. I could have my choice of any lot or lots on either Blake or Latimer Streets at $15 apiece, or, in case I was not flush in cash, a sack of flour would be received in lieu of $15 cash. My sacks of flour at that time were scarce, and the gold coin still scarcer. So I declined the tempting offer, and started for "Gregory diggin's," in the mountains.

I hung out my shingle there as M.D., and in a very few days began to have quite a varied and numerous clientèle of patients, and the gold dust began to come in quite satisfactorily. I had the honor of attending through quite a prolonged illness of mountain fever one of the locally famous men, Mr. Gregory, for whom the mining camp was named, and who was the first to discover gold in paying quantities anywhere in the Pike's Peak country. He was very grateful for my services, and, besides paying my bill, presented me with a very handsome nugget of gold from his mines as an honorarium.

We were all tender-feet in those days except a few trappers who had wintered in the foot-hills the year before, and they set afloat the most preposterous stories of the depth of snow and the impossibility of remaining in the mountains during the winter.

This had its effect on most of us, and we prepared to leave before the first real snow-storm should come.

I and a few others, eight in all, hired a team to carry baggage and tents, bought some bronchos, and started for Santa Fé, N.M., four hundred miles south, to winter.

The trail followed along down parallel to the old Sierra Madre Mountains, and the trip was one of the most enjoyable thirty days of travel that it has ever been my good luck to have. October and November in those altitudes and latitudes give the traveller the most delightful weather, and every day we met the greatest abundance of game, from grizzly bears to mountain grouse. We arrived in the city of the Holy Faith in due time, and we all felt as though we had suddenly dropped out of the United States and landed in a foreign country. The general appearance of the town and its inhabitants, their methods of doing business, customs, etc., impressed one very unfavorably; but there floated from the flag-staff on the plaza the Stars and Stripes, and everything immediately began to look more like home. The town was said to contain ten to twelve thousand people, and besides the army there were about a hundred so-called Americans, fifty or sixty Jew merchants, and as many gamblers from everywhere.

I again hung out my shingle near the plaza, and soon became acquainted with most of the Americans and many Mexicans. I began to acquire quite a practice, especially among the Mexicans; and, although it was difficult to understand or communicate with them, in a short time, by means of my Ollendorf and a suave señorita who lived in the same placita with me, I made rapid progress in acquiring enough of the Mexican lingo so that I could ask for symptoms, and give all needful instructions for the taking of medicine, food, etc.

The Mexicans affected to despise or think meanly of Americans, especially those Mexicans who could boast of pure Spanish blood. The following, however, shows how thin a veneer masked their envy. A young mother, of good Castilian blood, who had married an American, once held up to me with much pride her rather pretty baby, saying, "Ah! señor doctor, mira muchacha muy blanco." (Ah! doctor, admire my white baby). The doctor at that time could count upon a pretty good fee if his patient was able to pay it, but the great majority of the greasers, as the common people were called, were so unconscionably poor that one had not the face to charge them anything but the most meagre fee.

Dr. Sloan, major and surgeon, United States Army, stationed at the army post there, had performed an operation on a rich old don for double cataract. The operation had been very successful, and the old hidalgo was greatly pleased, of course. In due course of time he reminded the doctor that he would be pleased to pay the bill if he, the doctor, would name the amount. The doctor took some time to consider, and consulted Colonel Fauntleroy, the commanding officer, as to what he would consider a fair fee for the service. The old colonel said, "Ten thousand dollars, doctor,—not a cent less." The doctor took further counsel with his own conscience, and finally settled upon the sum $3,000 as a fair bill. This was named to his patient, and the next day the old man sent up the amount in a big trunk packed on the back of a burro; and it was all in big Mexican silver dollars.

When spring fairly opened, and it was thought safe to attempt the pass in the mountains, two of our original eight made up our minds that we would return to the mines alone. So we bought two ponies and two pack-mules, and started up the valley of the Rio Grande del Norte as being the shortest route. In a hundred miles' travel we came to the frontier Mexican city of Taos. We laid up here for a day or two to rest, and got an invitation to attend a Mexican fandango, or baih.

We were fortunate in meeting here at the baih the famous Kit Carson, the great scout and guide to General Fremont when he was hurrying across overland to invade California during Mexican war times. Mr. Carson afterward became brigadier-general during the Civil War, 1861-65. We found him a very pleasant oldish gentleman, say about sixty years of age. He gave us an hour of his time over a little light wine (he was a very abstemious man), recounting many of the battle raids and hair-breadth 'scapes he had experienced in his forty years of mountain and plains life. He told us of an Indian man whom he had seen among the Snake River tribe of Shoshone Indians, who was reputed by his friends and tribesmen to be two hundred and fifty years old. He said, "Of course, gentlemen, I can't vouch for this extreme age, but I swear to you that he was the oldest human being whom I have ever seen or expect to see." He described him as living in a basket supported and surrounded by blankets, and chewing with toothless gums and sucking the juice from a thin strip of raw deer meat. His body was so shrunken that his frame did not appear much larger than a ten-year-old boy. I was greatly interested in this story, but did not place much credence in the age of the subject until some years afterward I was stationed as post surgeon at Fort Bridger on Ham's Fork of Green River, over near the Wasatch Mountains in Utah.

Some officers of the garrison one day invited me to go with them on a drive down the river to see "the old woman." The old woman was known far and wide in that region as the oldest human being alive, and belonged to the same tribe of Snake River Indians as Kit Carson's old man belonged to.

The officers wanted my professional opinion as to whether she was or was not one hundred and fifty years old, as she was said to be. I readily accepted the invitation, and in about ten miles' drive came to the camp of a well-known mountain man, a half-breed, and by name Jack Hamilton. Jack had married the grand-daughter of "the old woman" and had ever after that taken care of her. He (Jack) was seventy-five years old, and had a "boy" of forty. Jack was not at home when we arrived, but the "boy" entertained us, and gave us all needful information about his ancient great-grandmother. She had a tepee of skins for herself alone, beside one of the family mansions of same material, and she insisted that, as she had always done her own cooking, she should continue to do it as long as she lived. We made a call at her tepee, but did not find her at home, but, after looking around the camp some little time, finally espied a crouching figure out in a shadowy grove, who was apparently picking up fagots. We waited patiently until the crouching figure had gathered her load of fagots, which she bound into a round bundle by a thong. She deftly slung the bundle on her shoulders, and started at a slow, tottering gait for her tepee, one hundred'and fifty feet distant. At about half-way she unslung the bundle, and, apparently in utter weariness, sat down on it to rest. Shortly after, by another deft manœuvre, she got it on her back, and made her way painfully to her tepee. She again unslung it, gasping for breath and seemingly exhausted by the effort.

The age and the scene were awesome. We stood there looking on perhaps the oldest human being on earth. She gave no notice that she was aware of our presence, although she had not seen strangers before perhaps for years. She sat on the fagots awhile, then began making a fire in the open, and preparing her evening meal. She was unable to stand erect, and, in moving around, her face came forward and was just over her knees. The knees were thrown forward, and the hands, when not otherwise engaged, were placed on her knees to support the trunk while walking. There seemed to be a sharp bend in the lumbar spine that was rigid, and did not allow forward or backward movement. There was extreme atrophy of all the soft tissues of the body except the skin. The bones were so scantily covered with flesh that a decided uncanny expression was produced, suggesting a fleshless skeleton.

She was the oldest human being whom I ever saw, and I told my companions that, if she was not one hundred and fifty years old, her physiological condition showed that she must be very near it.

RETIREMENT OF DR. DRAPER AS MEDICAL EXAMINER OF SUFFOLK COUNTY.

In the last number of the Bulletin we announced the resignation of Dr. Frank W. Draper from the Professorship of Legal Medicine, and the decision of the Faculty not to fill his place, but to provide for instruction in that branch in the course of instruction in the various departments. We have now regretfully to record Dr. Draper's retirement from the position of Medical Examiner of Suffolk County, to take place July 1, 1905. This office was created by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to succeed the old system of coroners and coroners' physicians, under which such a scandalous condition of affairs existed. Dr. Draper has held the office since its creation, and has performed its arduous and exacting duties with a conscientiousness, a degree of technical skill, and a devotion to the highest ethical ideals which make it seem well-nigh impossible to fill his place.

His Excellency the Governor of the Commonwealth has nominated as his successor Dr. William G. Macdonald, of Boston and the appointment has been approved by the Executive Council. Dr. Macdonald was born in South Boston in 1858, was educated in the public schools and at Boston College, and graduated from the Harvard Medical School in 1885. He was surgical interne in the Carney Hospital in 1884-85. From 1885-96 he was Medical Inspector and filled various other positions in connection with the Board of Health of the city of Boston. In 1896 he studied abroad, and of recent years he has practiced especially dermatology, and has served as dermatologist to the Carney, St. Elizabeth, and Mt. Sinai Hospitals. Dr. Macdonald's appointment came as something of a surprise, as it was not known that he had been particularly interested in pathology or forensic medicine.

Among other candidates prominently mentioned for the position we may mention Dr. George Burgess Magrath, Instructor in Pathology in the Harvard Medical School, Dr. T. J. Leary, Professor of Pathology in Tufts Medical School, and Dr. George Stedman, the present Assistant Medical Examiner.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF OVERSEERS TO VISIT THE MEDI- CAL SCHOOL IN 1904.

To the Board of Overseers of Harvard College:

Your Committee visited the Medical School on March 3, 1904.

The Dean of the Medical Faculty had no changes to recommend. The only alteration in the present building is a new fan and system of ventilation, which is now in use, and is necessitated by the erection of high buildings near-by. No other alterations are desirable. Although dark and inconvenient and overcrowded, the present building suffices, until the new Medical School is ready.

The shrinkage in numbers of the classes, due to the requiring of an A.B. degree, renders the old building more endurable for a couple of years than it would otherwise be. It is a happy omen that an increase of students is taking place in the Summer Courses and in the Post-graduate School, as high in the latter as sixty-four per centum, and with double the amount of fees. This is an indorsement of the superior laboratory and scientific instruction of the School. Moreover, this advance in laboratory research in both medicine and surgery is farther evidenced by the increasing and numerous publications of this School, not only in furnishing many of its own textbooks, but in varied and valuable monographs and experiments on special subjects.

The School has 473 students. There is a deficiency this year of $13,868. The salaries of the lower grade of instructors have been reduced twenty per centum. The fee for the fourth year has been raised to $200, as in the three previous years, but the $30 fee for graduation has been abolished. This makes the fourth year cost $170 instead of $100. The main consideration, after all, is to make this fourth year a complete year, equal to the others, but elective as to studies.

The pursuance of the "block system," so called, of instruction in the earlier years, and the appointment of a health committee for students are other noteworthy changes.

Five new buildings are promised for September, 1905, but may overrun that time.

There being ample land and a somewhat distant site, the need of a dormitory and a restaurant will soon be urgent.

The Chairman of your Committee, looking back fifty years when he entered this Medical School, may be allowed a brief digression on the changes in medical education. Then Anatomy by dissection, Inorganic Chemistry (mostly), and Morbid Anatomy in the museum were the only subjects approaching laboratory instruction. All else were lectures and books, with a modicum of hospital visits. Now we find the Medical School Building a hive of research. The dissecting-room and the museum are there still, but the whole edifice is crammed with laboratories and research-rooms.

Let us enumerate them: Hygiene, Physiology, Organic and Physiological Chemistry, Pharmacology and Applied Therapeutics, Embryology and Histology, Bacteriology, Pathology, Surgical Pathology. Eight laboratories, a basement for animals, storage for material in anatomy.

In contrast, three lecture-rooms, used alternately for lectures and recitations.

What a difference!

Six Professors, besides the Professor of Anatomy, giving their entire lives to scientific research and teaching.

Time is not at the disposal of this Committee to examine and report on the vast amount of clinical instruction given in the hospitals, although this consumes all the forenoons of the advanced classes.

It is rather the purpose of your Committee to report on the condition of the laboratories, and the wants of the laboratory teachers, in the college buildings.

Professor Dwight has been making a series of preparations in the variations of the human skeleton, which rivals, if it does not excel, any in existence. His plates, papier-maché models, corroded vascular preparations, and frozen sections, and also the sections of all the bones, are extremely interesting and valuable.

More anatomical material; differentiation of classes, whether pursuing medicine or dentistry; large dissecting-rooms; more light for private research-rooms, are the pronounced needs of this department.

Professor Harrington, in limited quarters, is doing much work in Hygiene as to the composition and purity of water, milk, air, foods, etc. Just now he is experimenting in asepsis.

Professor Minot showed the Committee most complete sections of a four weeks' embryo; many drawings done by his assistants; wax models, built up piece by piece from minute objects, and thus enlarged for demonstration. He has now a very large collection of sections and preparations, and the work in Embryology and Histology is steadily pursued.

Much time is wasted in drudgery which could be devoted to original work, could money be furnished. Professor Minot needs an artist, at $1,200 a year.

Professors Bowditch, Porter, and Cannon, in Physiology, have rooms larger than, and superior to, the rest of the laboratories. The work in animal and other experimentation is carried out here on a scale to afford each student an opportunity for personal observation.

There is a mechanical workshop here, with five men employed in making apparatus of precision. American turning lathes and other American machinery are employed. The result is a product of scientific test instruments so superior and so cheap as to be eagerly sought for all over the world. Japan, Australia, and Spain were about to take the samples we saw. It is evident that Dr. Bowditch could fill a large building with his own department.

Professor Wood, who kindly piloted your Committee over the building, showed us his Department of Chemistry. This has a large room and a light one, much to its advantage.

In Pathology, Professors Councilman and Mallory, whose researches and discoveries in small-pox and scarlet fever will be fresh in the minds of the medical profession, have fairly good rooms in the Sears Laboratory Building. The former says he prefers an endowment for pursuing research to any or all new buildings. He would rather stay in his cramped quarters if he could have a liberal pecuniary grant to pursue science. It must be remembered, however, that Dr. Councilman also uses a superb pathological plant provided by the Trustees at the Boston City Hospital. But all the laboratory men want money,—not for themselves, but for study. This need was warmly seconded by Professor Pfaff, in his department.

Dr. Councilman wants $200 at this moment to complete an important work. He also suggests that we should have a department for investigating and teaching tropical diseases. The West Indies are close at hand. They have, he asserts, all the tropical diseases. It ought to be possible to pursue research there in connection with facilities which could be afforded, with little or no expense, by the Fruit Company steamers. Investigators could go, bottles of infections and bacteria could be sent, and a School of Tropical Diseases be thus established here.

The Department of Bacteriology, under Professor Ernst, was very interesting. He showed the Committee contrasted cultures of human and bovine tuberculosis, and wonderful photographs of the same. He needs, for the use of his and other departments, a Carmann Projector, costing $500.

Dr. Ernst showed the Committee, with just pride, the Journal of Medical Research, which he has developed in seven years from a four-page pamphlet to two bulky volumes each year, all the subject-matter being original studies.

The Laboratory of Pharmacology and Experimental Therapeutics, under Professor Pfaff and Instructor Tyrode, is too limited in its quarters and badly lighted. Fortunately, these investigations can be pursued in the hospitals and in general practice.

Surgical Pathology has a laboratory under Instructor Nichols. It is here and in the hospitals that investigations on cancer and on tumors are being pursued. The basement is occupied by the vivaria, and the attic story by the dissecting room. Every inch of space is utilized, and twenty years has overfilled and outgrown this Medical School Building.

More room, more light, endowment,—these are the crying needs. The superb new structures being erected will supply the former; but the necessity of a liberal fund to support this vital work of studying and imparting knowledge to relieve suffering and to prolong life was never more apparent.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF OVERSEERS TO VISIT THE MEDICAL SCHOOL IN 1905.

To the Board of Overseers of Harvard College:

Your Committee to visit the Medical School met in that building February 15.

In view of the approaching removal of the schools to the new buildings, it recommends that no change, or expense other than for unavoidable repairs be incurred.

Your Committee regrets the serious falling off in the late entering classes.

The conditions for entering are as follows:—

ADMISSION OF STUDENTS.

Candidates for admission to this School must present a degree in Arts, Literature, Philosophy, or Science from a recognized college or scientific school, with the exception of such persons, of suitable age and attainments, as may be admitted by a special vote of the Administrative Board in each case.

The exception above referred to applies only to men who have practically finished a required course for a degree, but for some good and sufficient reason, such, for instance, as wishing to graduate with their class, prefer waiting until a later period for graduation; or to men who, without such a degree, have acquired an equivalent education and training sufficient to enable them to profit by the instruction offered in the School.

Your Committee suggests that a remedy for it may be found by striking out the second paragraph quoted above, and adopting as liberal a policy as is consistent with the first paragraph.

Your Committee further desires to call attention to the full and careful report made last year, and to the fact that no action has been taken on its recommendations.

For the Committee,

F. L. HIGGINSON.

ETHICAL FORCES IN THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE.

AN ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE STUDENTS OF HARVARD COLLEGE AT THE HARVARD UNION, ON APRIL 13, 1905, BY DR. RICHARD C. CABOT, 1892.

What forces are there in the profession of medicine that tend to bring out the best that is in men? I shall mention five:—

1. The sense of an obvious utility to others.
2. The inspiration of taking part in the progress of science.
3. The call for manual and mental dexterity.
4. The interest of the community in the profession and its aims.
5. The friendly contact with men, women, and children.

I.

The business of medicine is to get people out of difficulties through the application of science and of dexterity, manual and psychical. This task appeals at once to some of the strongest of our natural impulses. When we see a man fall in the street, we naturally want to help him up. To lend a hand in unharnessing the horse who has slipped down, to lift the baby onto the electric car, to direct the stranger to his destination, are impulses which spring up spontaneously as soon as we see the need. No sense of duty has to be appealed to.

Now the tasks of medicine are often of this sort. We see an obvious and crying need. The power to help is in our possession. The two pull at each other like magnet and armature, and, when we have yielded to the impulse which tugs to be set free, we turn out to have done something for which the community thanks us, something that brings us new power and satisfaction, new friendship and increase of knowledge.

II.

This opportunity issues, as I have said, in increase of knowledge. Every case the doctor sees teaches him something new. It is true that he does not see these opportunities to replenish his knowledge unless he has a goodly stock already, but in medicine I believe it is peculiarly easy to acquire this preliminary outfit.

In most sciences the difficulty is to get started. A moderate working capital will quickly breed more, but it is hard, dry work to acquire that working capital. There is a dead point where most men stick because there is no impulse to go farther and no immediate visible return for one's exertion.

But in medicine we find ourselves in the way of learning something, almost before we know it, because we see the use of it and have the power to follow it up. The average medical student, as I see him, has been as half-hearted as his classmates in his undergraduate work. At college he goes through the forms of study as if it were some one's else business in which he has no personal stake. But in the medical school he braces up, because he begins to feel the pressure of a real need for him, a real use for his knowledge, a real chance to use it in a hospital, and so to feel its power and to increase it.

Then after getting, through familiarity, a keen desire for the immediate, short-range usefulness of knowledge, he may develop the capacity to work for knowledge whose application is further off, dependent on months or years of work and waiting before the fruition comes. Larger schemes of research, needing patience, faith, and imagination, as the first transcontinental railroad did, begin to develop in his mind. He begins to feel the fellowship of others who are working at similar problems, to exchange plans and technique with them, to co-operate with them in research, and thus to get friendships that cross the barriers of distance and of race, and lend dignity and zest to his work.

A second inestimable service rendered by the tendencies which I am now describing has been to build up in us habits of mind that are instinctively antagonistic to habits of lying.

It is not at first sight obvious how the use of instruments of precision and the insistence on precise methods in their use favor the establishment of truthfulness as a corner-stone of our dealings with each other and with our patients. But, although this is not obvious, I am convinced that it is true. Any one who records his cases and makes his observations in an inaccurate or slovenly way finds his mind filled with a kind of haze. To clear away this haze when he comes to state his results, it is almost inevitable that he should fall into the habit of drawing upon sources other than reality for his materials and for his terms. If, on the other hand, a man has made his analysis, his measurements, and his clinical records accurately and thoroughly, he learns to lean upon facts, and to have confidence that whatever is true will turn out to work well. Thus he gets out of the habit of improvising, modifying, or embellishing his statements to suit traditional or preconceived ideas.

An enthusiastic advocate of manual training in the public schools once said in my hearing that a boy who had had a thorough course in sloyd work would never tell a lie. In this obviously exaggerated statement there is, I think, this much of truth: such a boy will find it much harder in the future to lie. The habit of taking our bearings straight from reality, a habit which wood-work or any other form of manual training produces, makes us almost helplessly dependent on data observed for every step of our thinking and of our plans. It is as if an actor should get into the habit of being prompted continually from behind the scenes, so that he never spoke his lines by rote or found the need of improvising them. The habit of improvising an embellishment cannot be acquired without practice, and the incessant use of scientific methods soon gets us fatally out of practice in the use of lies.

Quite without conscious intention or pious effort, therefore, I believe that our modern methods of medical work are steadily driving out habits of mind that make prevarication and lies of all shades possible.

III.

Science pursued without any ulterior object exerts, then, as I have tried to show, a distinct ethical force upon us. There are corresponding vices and exaggerations characteristic of the scientific mind,—scholasticism, pedantry, over-specialism. But, as the physician is kept by his profession in touch with actual human needs, his science is kept from wandering off along these by-paths. He is forced to distinguish the important from the unimportant. He must apply his knowledge, a part of it at least, and for this he needs common sense, skill, and dexterity. Many persons do not realize how vitally important manual dexterity is in medicine, in the diagnosis as well as in the surgical treatment of disease. To find out what ails your patient, you need not merely science, but art, not merely knowledge, but a trained and delicate ear, a power to recognize slight differences by sight and touch, a power to use various instruments of precision, the microscope, the stethoscope, and others; e.g., I think it is no exaggeration to say that the training of a physician requires as much time, knack, and practice, as the training of a musician. Indeed, there are many students in every class who do not acquire in four years the skill necessary to use the outfit of an up-to-date physician: they hobble along through their professional life, handicapped not by lack of brains or of good will, but of deftness in the application of their knowledge in practice.

No less essential than manual dexterity is psychical skill. Both in the investigation and in the treatment of the mental element which is recognized to-day in every disease there is an art which only long practice can give, and which even long practice often fails to bring to efficiency. The art of the cross-examiner, the art of the promoter, the art of the translator, are familiar examples of psychic dexterity in other professions. Something similar to each of these arts must be practised and applied to the physician. Three students writing down independently a patient's account of his troubles will get amazingly different stories, containing, each of them, a liberal proportion of unintended fiction; e.g., so to frame one's questions as to bring out the truth and to avoid putting into the patient's mind ideas which he then gives back to you as his own experience is an art so difficult that some physicians live and die without being able to acquire it, yet on this kind of psychic dexterity depends much of the patient's welfare. I have compared this power to the art of the cross-examiner, although there are obvious differences. There are similar differences between the art of the promoter,—the honest promoter,—and the art whereby the physician gains his patient's confidence, but the two have also a good deal in common. Both rest upon ability and integrity, but both call for skill in making that ability and integrity felt,—skill in the process of getting into touch. It is good for a man to have to acquire such skill.

The art of the translator is the art of efficient sympathy. It is the power to put one's self in another's place, to get at the meaning behind his words, and then to express that meaning afresh. This most difficult art the successful physician must acquire, and all physicians labor, more or less blindly, to acquire it. No literal translation is a good translation. No literal transcript of what the patient suffers, thinks, and wishes is true. He does not express himself in your language. You have to translate him, and it is often a delicate and difficult process, involving sympathy, imagination, and understanding.

To understand all is to forgive all. More than that, it is, I think, to find one's self wholly unable to avoid affection for the person so understood. Hence friendship springs up almost inevitably in any relation which forces us to translate another's meaning sympathetically. In just this relationship the physician again and again finds himself, and so in the natural course of his work he is sure to make friends, and to have the best of him developed in the process.

IV.

I have said that the business of the physician is to get people out of their troubles through the application of science in manual and mental dexterity. Obviously, then, medicine exercises some of the powers which a man of just our day and generation loves to develop. Science, human helpfulness, manual and mental dexterity, are characteristic interests of the modern American. Into them goes some of the best strength of the spirit of our time. Contrast medicine in this respect with other professions. A man who sets himself in this age and in this country to the practice of literature, of painting, or of the ministry, must feel, I think, that he has to succeed in spite of the spirit of his environment rather than by its aid. But the physician has the sympathy and the encouragement of almost every one whom he meets. Few business men, farmers, or laborers, are interested in the artist or the priest, but many of them are interested in the physician, and are glad by their sympathy or by their donations to help on his work.

Americans like medical work because its returns are obvious and swift, and also because it has in it the spirit of progress. Few professional men enjoy as physicians do the stimulus of reading almost every month an account of recent progress in their calling. The artist does not find that discoveries, like the use of pastels, like Monet's coloring, like Strauss's orchestration, crowd one another so fast that it is difficult, as it is in medicine, to keep abreast of them. Law and theology are not making many discoveries which interest the general public. But in medicine the demand for an up-to-date man is one which we must obey, or fall behind, and in the effort to meet this demand we are kept alive and awake.

V.

There are few other professions which bring one, as medicine does, into friendly relation with men, women, and children, with rich and poor, with Jew and Gentile. A business man's working hours are usually passed in the society of grown up men. He sees very little of women or of children. A school-teacher lives mostly among children, a clergyman sees lamentably little of men, while an artist or a student may see but few of either sex; but the physician naturally meets a wonderfully rich collection of human beings. Moreover, he meets them without any of the conditions of suspicion or antagonism which make friendship difficult. In the houses of the poor he never has to fear, as the charity visitor must, that he will be regarded as an intruder. His business is clear, and no one stops to think of him or of their differences from him. There is too much real need to be attended to. The labor leader, who inveighs against the villany of the plutocratic and parasitic classes, finds no difficulty in being on excellent terms with his doctor. Antagonisms and suspicions are for the time laid aside, and the simple human nature of doctor and patient can meet and fraternize.

The doctor carries with him a flag of truce in all the wars that divide us, man from man. He enjoys the fruits of perpetual peace, and, if he has in him any spark of human kindness, it can hardly help being fanned into warm friendliness by the events and the deeds that make up the routine of his day's work.

To a man of a certain type of mind there is a wonderful security about the life one leads as a physician. For it is possible and not difficult so to arrange one's plans and ambitions that, whatever happens, you win. Science, as one meets it in medicine, friendship as one gains it through medicine, are achievements so precious that it is not at all rare to see men glad of their own failures because through these failures science or friendship moves on a peg. A man may spend his life in the search for a cure for cancer, trying out one possibility after another, and at the end he may be left with empty hands,—no cure found. That would seem to be failure enough to satisfy the most convinced pessimist. But, if one has really got into the game and felt the team spirit of it, he is glad of his failures because each of them advances the ball. The possible cures were likely-looking: each of them had to be tried out. The work had to be done by some one; and now that it is done, now that those possibilities are excluded and the field thus narrowed, other men are set free for more positive advances, as in football the runner is set free by those who block off for him.

The general practitioner, who does little experimental research in pure medicine, is constantly failing to obtain his immediate object,—the cure of his patients; but he is practically certain to gain, if he genuinely wants it, the friendship of the people for whom he works, or at any rate an increase in his knowledge of human nature in health and in disease. Rather vague and abstract objects these, you may think. But my experience is that the peculiar opportunities of the practice of medicine and the sympathy of the age in which we work makes these great achievements—skill, science, friendship—objects to love as one loves a woman. And this not to the genius or the saint only, but to the average hard-working man, simply because it brings out the best that is in him.

NOTES.

American Medical Association meeting in Portland, Ore., July 10-14, 1905. All Harvard men who intend coming out to this meeting should make early application for hotel accommodation. The best hotel is the Hotel Portland. The manager, Mr. Bowers, is now ready to sign contracts for accommodation for next July.

Prices $3 and up, on the American plan. The next best hotels at present in existence are the Imperial Hotel and the Hotel Perkins. They are on the European plan, and offer rooms from $1.50 up. There are several excellent private hotels, which might be pleasanter for ladies. The following gives a partial list:—

The Hobart-Curtis, 14th and Jefferson Streets.

The Norton, 12th and Morrison Streets.

The Guillaum, 18th and Davis Streets.

The Palmer, Park and Alder Streets.

Then, too, the directors of the Lewis and Clark Fair have made arrangements for an "Inside Inn" to accommodate one thousand or more, to be located inside the fair grounds. For information on this point write The Lewis and Clark Centennial Exposition, 200 Alder Street, Portland, Ore.

Such other accommodations as are to be had may be ascertained by writing to Dr. William Jones, Abbington Building, Portland, Ore., who has charge of the hotel accommodation of members of the American Medical Association.

For information as to side trips which it would be interesting to take while on the coast, write the passenger agent of the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, or Northern Pacific Railroads, or go and talk with their agents in your own city. There are many such trips. Cheap rates are offered by all routes. The trains are comfortable, the service good, and the journey, even from Boston, not as long as it seems when first contemplated.

The medical profession of Portland and Oregon are putting forth every effort to make this meeting a success. July is a good month for it, as by that time the weather is settled, and Portland looking her best.

Those who have never been to the North-west before will find much that is novel and interesting to see and to do, so that the medical meeting is not the only attraction offered.

The Oregon beaches, the Columbia River, various mountain resorts, and, for those fond of such sport, trout fishing, offer a variety of local attractions. Other more distant ones should be mentioned, as the trip to Alaska, the Yellowstone Park, the Grand Cañon of the Colorado, and the well-known California resorts.

The quarterly meeting of the Harvard Club of San Francisco will be held on the evening of Friday, July 7. Further particulars about this dinner will be supplied later, and will be sent to all the Harvard men whose whereabouts in California are known. It is hoped to reach not only every Harvard medical graduate resident in California, but also all of the graduates who may be present at that time in attendance upon the meeting of the American Surgical Association in San Francisco. The address of the secretary of the Harvard Club is Richard C. Harrison, Crossley Building, San Francisco.

THE SAMUEL D. GROSS PRIZE.

This prize of twelve hundred dollars has been awarded to Dr. James Homer Wright (hon.), of Boston, for an essay on "The Biology of the Micro-organism of Actinomycosis."

The conditions annexed by the testator are that the prize "shall be awarded every five years to the writer of the best original essay, not exceeding one hundred and fifty printed pages, octavo in length, illustrative of some subject in surgical pathology or surgical practice, founded upon original investigations, the candidates for the prize to be American citizens."

It is expressly stipulated that the competitor who receives the prize, shall publish his essay in book form, and that he shall deposit one copy of the work in the Samuel D. Gross Library of the Philadelphia Academy of Surgery, and that on the title-page it shall be stated that to the essay was awarded the Samuel D. Gross Prize of the Philadelphia Academy of Surgery.

42 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

THE NATHAN LEWIS HATFIELD PRIZE FOR ORIGINAL RESEARCH IN MEDICINE.

Five hundred dollars will be awarded by the College of Physicians of Philadelphia to the author of the best essay submitted in competition on or before March 1, 1906. Subject, "The Clinical and Pathological Diagnosis of Sarcoma." Essays must be typewritten, designated by a motto or device, and accompanied by a sealed envelope bearing the same motto or device, and containing the name and address of the author. They must embody original observations and researches. The committee reserves the right to make no award, if none of the essays submitted is considered worthy of the prize. Further information can be had of Francis R. Packard, M.D., Chairman, College of Physicians, 219 South 13th Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

The suggestion made at the baseball dinner recently by Dr. E. H. Nichols (1892) that graduate coaching of college athletic teams should be abandoned, and that the men who play baseball or football or row should assume all the responsibility for their respective sports, will be appreciated by those who believe that intercollegiate athletics are now made too much of. But to take such a step now would be a very radical departure from the policy of every institution of learning which pays much attention to sports. If one college were to depend on its undergraduates solely, and at the same time compete with others which had graduate coaching, it would be at a great disadvantage. A considerable part of the usefulness of an older coach lies in his knowledge of the mistakes of previous years, and his ability to avoid a repetition of them.

It will probably be a long time before such a marked reform can be brought about. The desire to win, even by means which men do not approve when they talk soberly and rationally is now too strong. As some one has said, the public reads about an important football game, and sees that Harvard or Yale wins, but it does not know, and seems to care very little, whether the methods employed by the victorious team were proper or not. Until the alumni and undergraduates of our American colleges come to the conclusion that some of the things now done to bring success are worse than defeat, it will be impossible to give up graduate coaching. The tendency now is decidedly in the opposite direction.

The activity of the State Board of Health in prosecutions for sale of impure foods has induced the dealers in the Faneuil Hall Market, Boston, to adopt the following resolution: "We will not knowingly sell or have in our possession with intent to sell any article of food that contains any preservative or foreign substance intended to improve the condition or appearance of the same, and we will notify all manufacturers from whom we are purchasing our supplies that we will not receive or handle goods so prepared."

A strong effort is being made to induce the legislature to permit the city of Boston to borrow outside of the debt limit $150,000, to be expended for the purpose of establishing a municipal hospital for tuberculosis. The strongest opposition to this plan seems to centre about the hope that the Brigham Hospital, with its $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 endowment, may be devoted largely, at least, to this purpose.

BOSTON CITY HOSPITAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

This Association held its annual meeting Tuesday evening, February 14, at the Hotel Brunswick. There were ward visits at the hospital in the morning, after which luncheon was served. After the meeting in the evening the usual dinner took place, Dr. C. F. Folsom presiding. One hundred and thirty-five members were present. The speakers were the Hon. John D. Long, Dr. F. C. Shattuck, Charles E. Grinnell, Esq., Dr. D. W. Cheever, E. D. Codman, Esq., and Dr. J. G. Blake. At the close of the dinner Dr. C. H. Williams was introduced as the next president.

A meeting of the Council, was held Jan. 26, 1905, President Charles F. Folsom in the chair. Routine business for the most part was transacted. The Secretary brought to the attention of the Council some facts concerning the Quarterly. He reminded the Council that, in order to curtail the expenses it had been voted that the January and July numbers should be devoted to business transactions only. As the July number might properly contain an account of the business transacted at the annual meeting in June, and as there is no such meeting to report in January, the Secretary stated his opinion that the issue of the January number was inadvisable. The opinion of the Councillors present was that there is no necessity of issuing a publication of this character periodically, and it was voted to substitute the name "Bulletin" for "Quarterly" on the title-page, and to issue it when sufficient material should have accumulated rather than at stated periods, with the proviso that no more issues be made than are justified by the condition of the treasury of the Association. It is the present intention to have three issues a year, in April, July, and October, and a fourth issue, if circumstances shall require it.

JOSEPH H. CONVERSE, 2nd.

A MARTYR TO MEDICINE.

The sudden, almost tragic death of this promising young man, a fourth-year student at the Harvard Medical School, deserves more than passing notice. The son of Mr. Charles H. Converse, of Brookline, he entered Harvard in 1897. While in college, he was both a good student and a good athlete. He ranked well in his studies, and by his excellence as a hurdler contributed much to the victory of the Harvard-Yale team over the Oxford-Cambridge team in England in 1901. After graduating at Harvard College, he entered the Medical School, and would have taken his medical degree next June, after a very creditable four years' course. He was appointed a substitute at the Boston City Hospital for a house officer who was sick, on one of the medical services. During this brief term of service it fell to his lot to assist in the care of a Portuguese patient who entered the hospital with cerebro-spinal meningitis. He was present at a lumbar puncture, carried the fluid in a test tube to the laboratory, and subsequently during three days assisted in feeding the patient with a nasal tube. Eight days after first seeing this patient, early Friday morning, January 20, he had headache and vomiting. This condition presently improved to such an extent that he presented himself in the wards for his morning duties. The symptoms, however, shortly returned with great violence, yielding to no remedies, and he died within twenty-four hours, early Saturday morning. The diagnosis of cerebro-spinal meningitis was verified. The original patient is still alive in a comfortable condition, and there is good reason for anticipating a possible recovery.

This is one of those dispensations, fortunately rare, which must be accepted as at times inevitable in the discharge of his duties by the medical practitioner. One is taken, and the other left. It emphasizes once again a lesson which the young and enthusiastic, whether among doctors, students, or nurses, are prone to disregard,—the necessity of constant precautions in dealing with certain classes of medical cases. We believe it is generally the young officer or the young soldier who forgets or declines to seek cover on the firing line. There are times and circumstances, it must be admitted, when risks must be taken unhesitatingly, and precautions may be unavailing.

Although generally regarded as only very mildly contagious, the mode of origin and of propagation of the disease to which Mr. Converse has unhappily fallen a victim is still involved in much mystery. Sporadic cases and small epidemics continue to occur from time to time under the most inexplicable conditions as to their origin.—Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

AT DUTY'S POST.

IN MEMORIAM

J. H. C., 2D JAN. 21, 1905.

Not 'mid the din of shot and shell,
Where War its battling thousands slays
And hearts beat high for worldly praise,
Not there our noble warrior fell.

A Knight of Mercy, newly armed
In panoply of human skill;
His sword, a consecrated will.
He fought to save where Pain had harmed.

Within the peaceful hospital
He healed the sick, bearing the wand
Of science in his kindly hand
And answering Duty's every call.

His only foe, without, within,
Was man's last enemy on earth,—
The foe that "borders on our birth"
And strives for victory to win.

Too soon, alas! the fatal dart
Found him a moment off his guard;
O'er others keeping watch and ward
When the keen Archer pierced his heart.

At Duty's post our hero fell;
On Duty's face his closing eyes,
Missing the hoped-for earthly prize,
Beheld the smile he loved so well:

The smile of Heaven,—conferred on those Whose patient labors are well done,
Who win the guerdon which the Son
Of Man on faithful men bestows.

And somewhere in Life's vast domain
Our Knight of Mercy works and waits
Until, within the heavenly gates,
The loved of earth shall meet again.

Dr. E. P. Webster (1901) has opened an office in Portland.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE.

The opening of the new dispensary for tuberculosis patients at the Johns Hopkins Hospital, built through the generosity of Mr. Henry Phipps, took place February 21. The Laennec Society, founded some years ago by Dr. William Osler for the study of tuberculosis and of measures for its prevention, had charge of the ceremonies, holding its monthly meeting at the same time. Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs (1887), the president of the Laennec Society, presided, and delivered an address on "The Origin and Rise of Tuberculosis Dispensaries."

MASSACHUSETTS.

ANDOVER.

Dr. Charles E. Abbott (1881) and Dr. John A. Leitch (1887) are serving as members of the Andover Board of Health. Dr. Leitch is chairman of the board.

Dr. John P. Torrey (1896) has added a Roentgen ray coil to his office equipment.

Boston.

Dr. J. C. White (1856), formerly professor of dermatology in the Harvard Medical School, was president of the International Dermatological Congress held in Berlin in September, 1904.

Dr. David W. Cheever (1858) delivered an address on "The Religion of a Doctor" in the Old South Church, April 2.

Dr. J. Collins Warren (1866) retired from active service as surgeon to the Massachusetts General Hospital on January 31. In commemoration of this event and in appreciation of the relations which have existed between him and his assistants, his surgical house officers, past and present, have presented him with a very beautiful punch-bowl, appropriately inscribed. The retiring age for surgeons at this hospital is sixty-three years. Dr. Warren's first appointment was to the medical out-patient department thirty-six years ago. Thirty-five years ago he was transferred to the surgical out-patient department, and he has served the hospital for twenty-nine years as visiting surgeon.

A series of addresses on the various professions open to a man graduating from college are being given on Tuesday evenings in the living-room of the Harvard Union. Dr. J. Collins Warren (1866) gave an address on "Medicine" on April 25.

Dr. Frank W. Draper (1869), who has served with great credit and distinction for twenty-eight years as a medical examiner of Suffolk County, has sent to the Governor of Massachusetts his resignation of this office, to take effect at the expiration of the current term, June 30 next. Dr. Draper was one of the original appointees under the Medical Examiner Law, when it first went into operation.

Dr. Abner Post (1870) has been elected president of the Massachusetts Yale Alumni Association.

Dr. Charles Harrington (1881), secretary of the State Board of Health, has recently read a paper before the medical officers of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia on the subject of "Choice, Examination, and Protection of the Water Supply for Military Camps." The meeting was a large one.

Dr. Henry Jackson (1884) has removed to 380 Marlborough Street. Office hours, 2-3 P.M.

Dr. Edward Reynolds (1885) has removed to 65 Marlborough Street, where he will be able to receive patients for hospital treatment.

Dr. William G. Macdonald (1885) has been appointed medical examiner for Suffolk County, to succeed Dr. Draper.

Dr. Edward L. Twombly (1886) has removed to 483 Beacon Street. Office hours, 2.30-4 P.M. and by appointment.

Dr. Charles M. Whitney (1887) has been appointed instructor in genito-urinary diseases at Tufts Medical School.

52 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

Dr. Edward H. Nichols (1892) has been appointed advisory head coach of the baseball nine of Harvard College. During the past five or six seasons Dr. Nichols has been practically in charge of our baseball interests, although he has had no official title; and Harvard's successes on the diamond have been due in no small measure to the work he has done for the nine. It is gratifying to know that for another year at least he is to be at the head of our coaching force.

Dr. William L. Smith (1892) has returned to Boston after a two years' trip abroad, much of which time was spent in Persia.

Dr. Edward Allen Pease (1892) has removed to 443 Beacon Street. Office hours, 2-3 P.M.

Dr. E. H. Nichols (1892), who has been conducting an investigation into the etiology of cancer for the past five years at the Harvard Medical School, under the bequest made by the late Caroline Brewer Croft, has resigned his position on the commission. The third report of the commission has just been published, and contains an article by Dr. Nichols on "Implantation of Tissue and its Relation to Cancer"; Dr. F. B. Mallory (1890), "A Contribution to the Classification of Tumors"; Dr. Robert B. Greenough (1896), "On the Nature of Cell Inclusions of Cancer"; and Drs. R. H. Vose (1896) and W. C. Howe (1898), "On the Effects of the Röntgen Ray upon Cancer."

Dr. Daniel H. Craig (1892) has removed to 386 Commonwealth Avenue. Office hours, 1.30-3.30 P.M.

Dr. William Pearce Coues (1894) has removed to 261 Beacon Street. Office hours, 1.30-3.30 and 6-7.30 P.M.

Dr. Franklin W. White (1895), medical adviser to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, reports that during the last year only 185 out of the 1,600 students consulted him. Two left their work because of pulmonary tuberculosis, and two because of heart disease. A few were sent to the Massachusetts General Hospital, where the Institute has free beds. His investigations of the general health of the students show that two-thirds of the members of the Junior and Senior Classes are never absent a day because of illness, that only about 10 per cent. had any important illness during their four years' course, and that nearly all finished in good general health. Lack of physical exercise and inefficient sleep are the common causes of illness among the students.

Dr. Franklin S. Newell (1896) has removed to 379 Beacon Street.

Dr. Daniel Fiske Jones (1896) has removed to 114 Marlborough Street, near Clarendon. Office hours, 2.30-3.30 P.M.

Dr. Seabury W. Allen (1897) announces the removal of his office from 509 Beacon Street, Boston, to 121 East 38th Street, New York. Office hours, 12-1 P.M.

Dr. John T. Sullivan (1897) has removed to 139 Beacon Street, near Arlington. Office hours, 12.30-3.30 P.M.

Dr. Ralph C. Larrabee (1897) has been appointed instructor in clinical medicine and hæmatology at Tufts Medical School.

Dr. Richard Frothingham O'Neil (1897) has removed to 379 Beacon Street.

Dr. Walter Channing Bailey (1898) should be addressed 483 Beacon Street, corner Massachusetts Avenue, The Cambridge. Office hours, 2-4 and 6-8 P.M.

Dr. Wilder Tileston (1899) has opened an office at 169 Beacon Street.

Dr. Harry Chamberlain Low (1899) has removed to 432 Marlborough Street. Office hours, 1.30-3 P.M.

Dr. Percy Emerson Brown (1900) was married to Miss Bernice Elliott Mayhew at Cambridge, Dec. 7, 1904. He announces his removal to 155 Newbury Street. Office hours, 2-3 P.M. and by appointment. By means of a portable apparatus Dr. Brown is now prepared to make examinations by X-ray at the bedside, under any conditions, on emergency notice.

Dr. David Cheever (1901) has been appointed major and surgeon to the First Corps Cadets, Massachusetts Volunteer Militia.

Dr. Horace Binney (1901) has been commissioned first lieutenant and assistant surgeon vice Cheever, promoted.

Dr. B. T. Burley (1901) has been appointed superintendent of the newly established department for diseases of the nervous system at the Worcester City Hospital.

Dr. Walter R. Brinckerhoff (1901), who was Dr. Tyzzer's associate at Manila, has arrived at Alexandria, Egypt, en route to join the Carnegie Archæologic Expedition to the Trans-Caucasus, of which he is physician.

Dr. Elisha Flagg (1901) has removed to 190 Commonwealth Avenue. Office hours, 1.30-3 P.M.

Dr. A. C. Cummings (1901) is at 550 Centre Street, Newton.

Dr. G. O. Clark (1903) has opened an office at 84 Commonwealth Avenue

CLINTON.

Dr. A. H. Blake (1904) is resident physician of the Clinton Hospital.

LAWRENCE.

Dr. Charles G. Carleton (1867) has removed his office to 264 Essex Street, Merchants Bank Building, during the reconstruction of the New Bay State Building.

Dr. Octavius T. Howe (1877) is a member of the consulting staff of the Lawrence General Hospital.

Dr. Frank B. Flanders (1878) and Dr. George W. Dowe (1881) are on the active staff of the Lawrence General Hospital. The former is on the surgical and the latter on the medical staff.

Dr. Frederick W. Kennedy (1883) has been elected chairman of the Lawrence Board of Health.

Dr. Herbert W. Manahan (1894) read an interesting paper, entitled "The Physician and the Auto," at the November meeting of the Lawrence Medical Club. Dr. John J. O'Sullivan (1896) was the host of the evening.

54 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

Dr. George B. Sargent (1894) recently entertained the Lawrence Medical Club at his home.

Dr. John T. Cahill (1896) is a member of the Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health.

Dr. Timothy J. Daly (1897) and Miss Isabel C. Bastian of this city were married Nov. 23, 1904. They have returned from a wedding trip, and are residing at 50 Vine Street.

Dr. Victor A. Reed (1897) and Dr. Gustave E. Kurth (1901) are local medical examiners for the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

Dr. Edwin B. Forbes (1897), with his daughter, has been visiting friends in this city. Dr. Forbes's practice is located in Detroit, Mich.

The marriage of Dr. Joseph A. Dorgan (1898) and Miss Anna M. Gookin, daughter of Mr. James Gookin, of Lowell, took place in that city. Dr. and Mrs. Dorgan are at home at 84 Knox Street.

Dr. Fred D. McAllister (1898) is enjoying a few weeks' pleasure trip to Mexico.

Dr. Joseph F. Howard (1899) is one of the ward physicians of Lawrence, being in charge in Ward 2.

Dr. J. Joseph Bartley (1901) has removed his residence to 85 Cross Street. His office is still in the Slater Building.

Dr. Arthur H. Cutter (1901) has been appointed local medical examiner for the New York Life Insurance Company.

Dr. J. Forrest Burnham (1901) presented a paper on "Appendicitis" at the January meeting of the Essex North District Medical Society, M. M. S., held at Haverhill.

Dr. Albert W. Hancock (1904) has entered upon his service as junior house officer at the Lawrence General Hospital.

NEW BEDFORD.

Dr. William N. Swift (1881) and Mrs. Swift celebrated their silver wedding February 15.

NEWTON CENTRE.

Dr. George L. West (1894) has been appointed medical examiner of the Seventh Middlesex District. Dr. West has practised medicine in Newton, and is a member of the staff of the Newton Hospital.

PEABODY.

Dr. J. J. Hickey (1903), who recently severed his connection with the Mercy Hospital and St. Luke's Sanatorium at Springfield, has opened an office at 30 Main Street.

MICHIGAN.

DETROIT.

Dr. Carl S. Oakman (1903) has opened an office at 32 Adams Avenue.

MONTANA.

DILLON.

Dr. Maurice A. Walker (1891) has been re-elected coroner of Beaverhead County.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

Our correspondent in Newfoundland writes: "The Harvard graduates located in 'ye ancient colony' are few in number and far between. Dr. Herbert Smith (1870), who has been in active practice at Burin for the past twenty-seven years, is well and, I am pleased to say, doing well. Burin is west of Trepassey 130 miles. Dr. Thaddeus Scott (1860) is located at Stephenville, west from Trepassey about 480 miles. I have been informed he has a good practice and is doing fairly well. I am certain, if he is a Nimrod or piscatorially inclined, and can find time from his practice, he will not have far afield to go and enjoy the sport, as he resides in a sportsman's paradise.

"Dr. John Peter Smith (1869) lives at Greenspond, about 230 miles from Trepassey. So, you will perceive, we are really far between. Dr. Smith is well and doing well. Your correspondent, I am pleased to say, is well. Unlike the other medicos, he combines medicine and law, which would no doubt appear antagonistic. However, I endeavor to keep them from clashing. Between the two I am kept occupied."

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

MANCHESTER.

At a recent meeting of the New Hampshire Surgical Club, held in Manchester, Dr. William M. Conant (1884), of Boston, read a very interesting paper on "Extra-uterine Pregnancy."

At the annual banquet of the Manchester Academy of Medicine, held at the Derryfield Club, Feb. 24, 1905, Dr. E. H. Nichols (1892), of Boston, read a paper on "The Present Status of the Theory of Cancer."

At a recent meeting of the Manchester Academy of Medicine Dr. J. Franklin Robinson (1886) was elected president, Dr. William H. A. Lyons (1890) treasurer, and Dr. D. W. Parker (1903) secretary.

NEW JERSEY.

NEWARK.

The first anniversary dinner of the Harvard Club of New Jersey was held in Achtel-Stetter's on Saturday evening, March 25. More than a hundred men were present, and the affair was an unqualified success.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY.

Dr. C. R. L. Putnam (1895) has spent the past winter in California.

The annual catalogue of the Harvard Club of New York City makes a compact little book of 150 pages. It contains the act of incorporation, the constitution and by-laws, lists of officers and members, and a necrology. The members number 2,061, of whom 34 are life, 1,229 resident, and 798 non-resident members.

NOVA SCOTIA.

Dr. W. Huntley MacDonald (1892) has been appointed secretary of the Nova Scotia Medical Society.

OHIO.

CLEVELAND.

Dr. R. H. Birge (1897) has been appointed chief medical examiner for Cleveland of the New York Life Insurance Company.

Dr. G. W. Morehouse (1897) has removed his office to 260 Euclid Avenue. He retains his former residence at 842 Logan Avenue.

Dr. F. J. Geib (1899), of Ashtabula, announces the birth of a daughter.

Dr. H. L. Sanford (1900) has been appointed assistant surgeon, Lakeside Hospital Dispensary. He has also been appointed city physician.

Dr. Eliot Alden (1901) has been appointed assistant surgeon, Lakeside Hospital Dispensary.

Dr. H. O. Feiss (1902) has been appointed instructor in orthopedics, Cleveland College of Physicians and Surgeons, and assistant in orthopedics, Cleveland General Hospital.

OREGON.

OREGON CITY.

Dr. W. E. Carrl (1885) is a member of the Oregon State Board of Medical Examiners.

PORTLAND.

Dr. E. F. Tucker (1884) has been appointed chairman of the Committee on "Places for Meetings" for the A. M. A., which will meet here July 10-14, 1905. Dr. Tucker went to New York and Boston in February. He has now returned to Portland.

Dr. J. P. Goray (1891) has offices in the Oregonian Building.

Dr. G. S. Whiteside (1897) has been appointed chairman of the Local Committee of Arrangements for the American Urological Association, which will meet here at the same time as the American Medical Association, July 10-14, 1905. Dr. Whiteside recently read a paper before the City and County Medical Society on "Urinary Tuberculosis."

PENNSYLVANIA.

PHILADELPHIA.

Dr. Maurice Ostheimer (1897) is secretary of the Philadelphia Pediatric Society.

PITTSBURG.

Dr. P. J. Eaton (1888) was elected on January 12 president of the Children's Hospital Alumni Association of Boston, and on the same date was made an honorary member of the Pittsburg Club of Harvard University. On Dec. 10, 1904, he was chosen secretary and treasurer of the Associated Harvard Clubs.

RHODE ISLAND.

NEWPORT.

Dr. Edward L. Cunningham (1832), at the time of his death the oldest living graduate of the university, died Jan. 29, 1905, in the ninety-sixth year of his age. (See obituary notice.)

PROVIDENCE.

Dr. H. G. Miller (1865) retired from active practice Jan. 1, 1905.

Dr. C. M. Godding (1883) has resigned his position as visiting surgeon to the Rhode Island Hospital.

At the annual meeting of the Rhode Island Hospital Club, held Nov. 30, 1904, Dr. George L. Richards (1886), of Fall River, Mass., was elected vice-president, Dr. George A. Matteson (1900) secretary, and Dr. Donald Churchill (1898) treasurer.

At a meeting of the club, March 1, 1905, Dr. Albert A. Barrows (1902) read a paper on "Modern Aseptic Methods."

At a meeting of the Rhode Island Medical Society held Sept. 1, 1904, Dr. George L. Richards (1886) read a paper on "The Significance of Pus in the Nose, with Special Reference to the Affections of the Accessory Sinuses and their Proper Treatment."

At a meeting held March 2, 1905, Dr. E. D. Clarke (1892), of Woonsocket, read a paper on "Puerperal Eclampsia," and Dr. John C. Pegram, Jr. (1897), read a paper on "Penetrating Bullet Wound of Abdomen, passing through the spleen, stomach, vertebra, and spinal cord. Laparotomy and suture of the stomach wounds. Recovery. Subsequent laminectomy and removal of bullet from spinal cord. Recovery."

At the annual meeting of the Providence Medical Association, held March 6, 1905, Dr. Frank L. Day (1889) was elected president, Dr. Donald Churchill (1898) secretary, and Dr. Winthrop A. Risk (1893) treasurer.

58 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

At the regular monthly meeting in December Dr. W. A. Risk (1893) read a paper on "The Business End of Medicine." At the January meeting a symposium on "The Venereal Peril" was presented, and papers were presented by Dr. George W. Porter (1874), Dr. Herbert Terry (1880), Dr. Gardner T. Swarts (1879), and Dr. S. A. Welch (1884).

SOUTH CAROLINA.

COLUMBIA.

Dr. J. W. Babcock (1886) has been given the honorary degree of LL.D. by South Carolina College for his splendid work as superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane and for his public-spirited services to the State and to the city of Columbia.

WISCONSIN.

MILWAUKEE.

Dr. William Thorndike (1896), at the annual meeting of the Milwaukee Medical Society, was elected vice-president of the society for the ensuing year.

At a recent meeting of the Milwaukee County Medical Society, Dr. Samuel W. French (1873) delivered a most interesting stereopticon lecture on "The Ritual and Temples of Æsculapius at Epidaurus and Athens."

At the request of Dr. John M. Dodson, dean of Rush Medical School, Dr. G. A. Harlow (1893) has been giving a few lectures to the third and fourth year men on the subject of "Medical Selection of Life Insurance Risks."

UNITED STATES ARMY.

A son was born Dec. 19, 1904, at Fort Schuyler, New York, to Mrs. Barney, wife of Lieutenant Charles Norton Barney (1895).

Lieutenant Charles Norton Barney, Medical Department (1895), returned to the Philippines for a three years' tour of duty on the transport "Thomas," which left San Francisco March 31. He was accompanied by his wife and his two boys.

UNITED STATES NAVY.

Dr. James H. Payne, Jr. (1889), Passed Assistant Surgeon, U.S.N., has been assigned to the "Marietta." In July he was at Tangier, Morocco, and in September touched at St. Helena on the way to South America, via Capetown.

THE SUMMER COURSES IN THE MEDICAL SCHOOL OF HARVARD UNIVERSITY.

The Medical School of Harvard University announces the following courses of study, to be given during the summer of 1905 by the regular corps of instructors in the School and others authorized by the Faculty. These courses are designed to afford facilities for practical training in all branches of medical science, besides offering opportunity for laboratory research and an acquaintance with the most advanced methods of investigation. They are open only to graduate and undergraduate students of medical schools recognized by the Faculty of Medicine, and to such others as the Dean of this Faculty approves.

The instructors include in their number many members of the medical and surgical staffs of the various large hospitals in the city of Boston, and an abundance of clinical material will thus be available for teaching purposes.

The laboratories of the School are of acknowledged excellence in equipment and in the advantages which they offer for the study of Anatomy, Physiology, Chemistry, Pathology, Bacteriology, and Hygiene.

Students and practitioners will be able during their attendance to combine several courses with an economy of time, as the hours of instruction have been established, as far as practicable, with that end in view.

If a student desires to pursue any special branch of inquiry not listed in the announced courses, he will be assisted in making acceptable arrangements therefor.

Certificates of attendance upon any of the courses will be given to those who desire them.

Information regarding boarding places in Cambridge and Boston may be obtained on application. Attention is called to the statement on page 85 of the means by which summer students may secure reduced railroad rates.

For information not contained in this pamphlet address the Dean of the Harvard Medical School, 688 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass., or the individual Instructors, care of the Dean.

All candidates wishing to take summer courses should first register at the Dean's office and pay the required fee, for which they will receive a receipt. This receipt should be shown at the first exercise, to the Instructor giving the course.

*Courses marked * are open to female medical students and practitioners.*

ANATOMY.

1. Dr. DAVID CHEEVER. Surgical Anatomy of the Abdomen.—The course will include the external anatomy of the abdomen, with surgical landmarks; the abdominal wall,—its blood and nerve supply, with special reference to incisions; the anatomy of inguinal and femoral hernia; embryological development of the greater and lesser peritoneal cavities; general topographical anatomy of the abdominal cavity and its contents, with special reference to its surgical bearings; the relations of the kidneys and ureters, and the posterior abdominal wall.

Six to eight exercises, with lectures and demonstration by the instructor and dissection by the student. Any time in July or August.

Fee, $25,* with a small charge for material.

2. Dr. HARRIS P. MOSHER. Anatomy of the Nose and Throat.—The course is to consist of at least six demonstrations of one hour each. Special attention will be given to the anatomy of the accessory sinuses. Courses illustrated by charts, and wet specimens, including a series illustrating the variations of the sinuses.

Twelve exercises, beginning any time in July and August; days and hours to be arranged with the instructor. Courses will be repeated as often as necessary. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

3. Dr. LINCOLN DAVIS. Genito-urinary Anatomy in the Male.—The course will consist of five exercises of two to two and one-half hours each, with dissection, demonstration, and instruction illustrated by anatomical plates, prepared specimens, and the male cadaver. The student will be asked to perform so much of dissecting as material will permit, under the direction of the instructor.

Five exercises, beginning any time in July, ending a week later. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

4. Dr. R. G. WADSWORTH. Anatomy of the Female Genito-urinary Organs.—The course will cover the following subjects: development of the genito-urinary system; adult anatomy of the external genitals, vagina, uterus, and appendages, and the urinary system; the bony pelvis with its ligaments, fasciæ, muscles, vessels, and nerves; the relations of the pelvic organs and structures; the female perinæum.

Five exercises, beginning any time in July or August.

M., T., W., Th., F., 10 A.M. to 12 M. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $20. (Two dollars extra will be charged for each part dissected.)
Unlimited in number.

HISTOLOGY AND EMBRYOLOGY.

5. Dr. FREDERIC T. LEWIS. Histology.—This is a course in elementary human histology. It is a repetition, in so far as the limited time allows, of the histological part of the required first-year course in "Histology and Embryology." Informal daily lectures precede the distribution of the specimens therein described, the microscopic study and drawing of which should occupy the remainder of the morning. The laboratory will be open during the afternoon and on Saturday, when the student may continue his work without instruction. Those who desire to stain and mount human sections may obtain them, but it is more desirable to procure a set of well-mounted specimens from a student who has taken the regular first-year course.

Twenty-four exercises, beginning June 26, ending July 28.

M., T., W., Th., F., 10 A.M. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $20,* and $2 for material. Unlimited in number.

6. Dr. FREDERIC T. LEWIS. Embryology.—This course in Elementary Embryology is more than equivalent to the embryological part of the required first-year course in "Histology and Embryology." Each student should stain, make sections of, and mount serially two chick embryos and a pig of about 12 mm. The study of these three series is supplemented by the examination of models, reconstructions, and sections belonging to the embryological department. The student should devote the entire afternoon to his embryological work.

Twenty-four exercises, beginning Monday, June 26, at 2 P.M., and ending Friday, July 28. Every afternoon except Saturday. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $20,* and $2 for material. Unlimited in number.

PHYSIOLOGY.

7. Professor W. T. PORTER. Physiology.—The Summer Course in Physiology will be given daily during the five weeks from June 29 to August 1, inclusive. This course will be found to be valuable to instructors of schools and colleges who seek experience in the teaching of physiology by laboratory methods. Students who wish to prepare themselves for the courses in the Medical School, or who may desire to recover ground lost by illness or other misfortune, will also find an opportunity here. The instruction will consist of fundamental experiments performed by the students themselves, and the study of accessory data. An informal lecture or conference will be given daily.

Thirty exercises, beginning June 26, ending July 29.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., all day. Harvard Medical School, Room B. Fee, $40.* Unlimited in number.

CHEMISTRY.

8. Dr. R. L. EMERSON. Physiological Chemistry.—The course will be made to cover as nearly as possible the subject as given to the first-year students. The subjects studied are the carbohydrates; the proteids, their composition, relationship, chemical properties, methods of precipitation and separation; the fats; the chemistry of digestion; the bile; the blood; milk and the urine. It will consist chiefly of laboratory work, but a number of lectures and recitations will be given in addition.

A deposit of five dollars is required to meet charges for breakage and supplies.

Twenty exercises, beginning July 3, ending July 28.

M., T., W., Th., F. Lectures, etc., 11 A.M.; laboratory open from 9 to 4. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $20. Unlimited in number.

9. Dr. R. L. EMERSON. Urinary Analysis.—A course in the chemical and microscopical examination of the urine, with special reference to the diagnosis of pathological conditions of the kidneys and urinary passages, will be given either at the Medical School or City Hospital.

A deposit of five dollars is required to meet charges for breakage and supplies.

Twenty exercises, beginning July 3, ending July 28.

M., T., W., Th., F., 11 A.M. Harvard Medical School. Laboratory open from 9 A.M. to 4 P.M.

Fee, $20. Unlimited in number.

10. Dr. R. L. EMERSON. Advanced Physiological and Pathological Chemistry.—Advanced course in special subjects in Physiological and Pathological Chemistry will be given for those who are interested in the subject and are qualified to pursue it, consisting of informal talks and special laboratory work. Every effort will be made to meet the wishes of those taking this course. Details can be arranged personally or by letter to Dr. R. L. EMERSON, 688 Boylston Street, Boston.

Fee, by arrangement. Unlimited in number.

PATHOLOGY.

11. Professor F. B. MALLORY. Pathology.—Attention is directed chiefly to the technique of making post-mortem examinations, to the study of the material obtained from the autopsies and from surgical operations, to histological technique, and to drill in making diagnosis of pathological lesions. For the last purpose, mounted sections from the laboratory collection and sections to be stained by the student are employed in large numbers. During the seven weeks the men in the class make all of the post-mortem examinations at the Boston City Hospital and the Children's Hospital; these include in appropriate cases not only the head and the trunk, but also the spinal cord, and, by Harke's operation, the nasopharynx. The pathological material is studied in the fresh state by tested preparations and frozen sections, and also after fixing and staining by the most approved methods. The men are encouraged to write out reports of the autopsies, and to describe and draw the gross and microscopic appearances of all the pathological specimens they study. The routine bacteriological and blood examinations for the Hospital afford a large amount of material to those interested in these lines of work.

The course is intended for students who have had as much work in pathology as is taught during the second year in the Harvard and Johns Hopkins Medical Schools.

Leitz microscopes (including triple nose piece and one-twelfth oil immersion lens) can be rented from the Bacteriological Department for $3.

Forty-one exercises, beginning July 3, ending August 19. 9 A.M. to 4 P.M., daily. Pathological Laboratory, Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $50. Limited to fourteen. In order to be sure of securing a place, application should be made by May 1.

12. Dr. GEORGE BURGESS MAGRATH. Pathology.—The course will deal with the subject of Pathological Anatomy and Histology, and will be so conducted as to meet the needs alike of those who wish to review the subject in systematic fashion and of those who desire instruction and practice in technical methods and in pathological diagnosis.

The work in the morning will be carried on in the Pathological Laboratories of the Carney and the Long Island Hospitals, and will here consist in the making of post-mortem examinations, the working up of material derived from them, and in the study and diagnosis of surgical specimens received from the operating-rooms. Especial attention will be given to the use of the freezing microtome and to the methods employed for rapid diagnosis.

The work in the afternoon will be in the Pathological Laboratory of the Medical School, and will here be adapted to the needs of the individual student. For such as desire it a systematic course will be given, covering retrograde processes, inflammation, repair, diseases due to pathogenic micro-organisms, tumors, and the special pathology of the circulatory system, lung, liver, spleen, alimentary tract, and genito-urinary system. Students who wish to spend their entire time in the practice of technical methods will be given opportunity for work of this sort in the afternoon.

The morning or the afternoon divisions of the course may be taken separately or together.

The course will be given daily (except Saturday afternoon) in the Pathological Laboratories of the Carney and the Long Island Hospitals, and of the Medical School.

Each student will be provided with a desk, locker, and reagents.

Leitz microscopes (including triple nose piece and one-twelfth oil immersion lens) may be rented from the Bacteriological Department for $3.

Forty exercises, beginning July 5, ending August 19.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., at 9.30 A.M. and 2 P.M. Carney and Long Island Hospitals and Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $35.* Unlimited in number.

BACTERIOLOGY.

13. Dr. CALVIN GATES PAGE. Bacteriology.—This course will include preparation of the nutrient media; general bacteriological methods; morphology of the more important disease-producing organisms; together with the microscopic diagnosis of gonorrhœa, tuberculosis, typhoid fever, and diphtheria.

Twenty-five exercises, beginning July 3, ending August 4.

M., T., W., Th., F., 3 P.M. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $30.* Unlimited in number.

14. Dr. HENRY J. PERRY. Bacteriology.—This course consists almost entirely of laboratory work, and is intended to cover the subject of general bacteriology, special emphasis being laid on the diagnosis of gonorrhœa, tuberculosis, diphtheria, typhoid fever, and glanders.

Twenty-five exercises, beginning August 7, ending September 8.

M., T., W., Th., F., 3.15 P.M. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $30.* Unlimited in number.

15. Dr. HIBBERT WINSLOW HILL. Public Health Bacteriology.—The bacteria of the infectious diseases: as elucidating these, so much of general bacterial morphology and physiology, preparation of media, sterilization, plating, counting, isolation, microscopical study, and cultural study as is necessary to their recognition and differentiation in practical work, and to the interpretation of the results obtained.

The number of individual exercises varies: minimum, 50 hours, distributed over six weeks. Applications made to Room 607, Sudbury Building, Boston.

Fee, varies with previous training of applicant; minimum, $30. Limited to two.

16. Dr. LANGDON FROTHINGHAM. The Diagnosis of Infectious Diseases of Animals by Laboratory Methods.—The course will include the methods of isolation, cultivation, and identification of the specific organism causing each disease, when this is possible; the preparation, staining, and study of sections of tissue presenting typical lesions or conditions which are diagnostic; the examination of the blood for parasites occurring there. The methods of inoculation of experiment-animals in cases where a diagnosis can only be made by this means.

Applicants must have some knowledge of laboratory technique in bacteriology and pathology.

Hours arranged with instructor. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $30.* Unlimited in number.

HYGIENE.

17. Assistant Professor HARRINGTON and Dr. WALKER. Hygiene.—Instruction in the analysis of water, air, soils, and foods; in the testing of disinfectants; and in the sanitary inspection of dwellings. The course is not open to those who have not had laboratory training in chemistry.

Thirty exercises, beginning July 5, ending August 16.

M., T., W., Th., F., hours to meet the convenience of applicants, so far as possible. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $50.* Limited to eight.

MEDICINE.

The courses in Medicine will be administered under the direction of Dr. ELLIOTT P. JOSLIN. Letters regarding special information may be addressed to him, in care of the Harvard Medical School.

These courses are so arranged that a student may fill the whole or part of his time with one or more teachers. They include instruction in the medical wards and out-patient departments of the various hospitals, as well as work in the clinical laboratories of the same. The clinical courses are in the morning. A specially combined laboratory course is offered in the afternoon, and is designed to supplement the clinical laboratory work of the morning. Attention is also directed to the laboratory courses of other departments, which also occur at this time. A student, therefore, can easily fill all his time with work in medicine.

It is the aim of the department to offer advantages for work upon special lines, and to this end courses will be arranged in diseases of the stomach, heart, lungs, or special exercises will be given upon diabetes, the dietetic treatment of disease, etc., provided suitable notice is given of a desire for such instruction.

One evening each week will be devoted to short talks on medical subjects, followed by an informal reception, at which it is hoped the students and instructors, working in the various courses, may be brought together.

Attention is called to the new medical out-patient departments of the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Boston City Hospital, which are specially adapted for teaching purposes, and have unusual facilities for the simultaneous examination of a large number of cases.

Information will be gladly furnished by the department, upon any subject relating to summer medical work, as well as to details regarding boarding places and rooms.

Special Medical Courses.

18. Dr. HERMAN F. VICKERY. Clinical Medicine.—Diagnosis and treatment of medical patients of both sexes and all ages, in the wards of the Massachusetts General Hospital. Much stress is laid on physical examination. Laboratory methods are habitually and extensively employed, but their technique is not taught.

Thirteen exercises, beginning July 3, ending July 31.

M., W., F., 10 to 11 A.M.

Fee, $15. Unlimited in number.

19. Dr. VICKERY offers a similar course, beginning August 2, ending August 30.

20. Dr. HENRY JACKSON. Clinical Medicine.—Clinical instruction in the wards of the Boston City Hospital. Especial attention given to typhoid fever and diseases of the heart. See Course 38.

Twenty exercises, beginning July 6, ending August 19.

T., Th., S., 10 A.M.

Fee, $20.*

21. Dr. J. W. BARTOL. Clinical Medicine.—Clinical instruction in the wards of the Boston City Hospital.

Fourteen exercises, beginning August 1, ending August 31.

T., Th., S., 10 A.M.

Fee, $20.

22. Dr. RICHARD C. CABOT. Physical Diagnosis.—The ground covered includes the examination of the entire body, heart, chest, abdomen, and extremities, with the examination of blood, urine, sputum, and stomach contents so far as these contribute to the diagnosis, prognosis, and treatment of the case. Each student will be required to examine and report on cases each day, and to those who attend regularly and show capacity a certificate of proficiency will be given by Dr. Cabot.

Beginning August 1, ending August 31.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $30.*

23. Dr. CABOT offers a similar course beginning September 1, ending September 30.*

24. Dr. EDWARD N. LIBBY. Clinical Medicine.—Clinical instruction in the Out-patient Department of the Boston City Hospital.

Twenty exercises, beginning June 1, ending June 23.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 10 A.M.

Fee, $20. Unlimited in number.

25. Dr. LIBBY offers a similar course, beginning September 1, ending September 23.

26. Dr. WILLIAM H. SMITH. Clinical Medicine.—Clinical Instruction in the Out-patient Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

Twenty-six exercises, beginning June 1, ending June 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 to 12 A.M.

Fee, $20.* Unlimited in number.

27. Dr. SMITH. Clinical Medicine.—This course will, through the courtesy of Dr. J. J. Minot, be held in his wards at the Massachusetts General Hospital. Ample opportunity to study typhoid with its numerous complications will be given. The clinic offers unusual advantages for the study of diseases of the heart and lungs. Where blood, urine, or sputum examinations are needed for a proper study of the case, such examinations will be made. The application of laboratory methods as aids to diagnosis will be a feature of the course.

Beginning August 1, ending August 31.

T., Th., F., 10 to 12 A.M.

Fee, $25. Limited to six.

28. Dr. SMITH offers a similar course during September, beginning September 1, ending September 29.

29. Dr. FREDERICK T. LORD. Clinical Medicine.—Opportunity will be given for practical work in Physical Diagnosis. As far as possible, cases will be assigned to members of the course, who will make the physical examination and the necessary analysis of blood, urine, sputum, or gastric contents, etc. Individual instruction will be aimed at, as far as time will permit. The aim will be to cover the more important diseases met in practice. At the end of the morning the class will assemble with Dr. Lord for a consideration of the more instructive cases. At this time the treatment of special conditions will be discussed.

Beginning June 1, ending June 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $25.* Unlimited in number.

30. Dr. LORD offers a similar course, beginning July 3, ending July 31.

31. Dr. JOSEPH H. PRATT. Clinical Medicine.—The first hour of the morning will be devoted to informal lectures on selected topics, and special demonstrations of cases and methods of diagnosis and treatment. The students and assistants will be encouraged to present short papers on definite subjects connected with the diseases studied. The remainder of the forenoon will be spent by the students in the examination of patients. Special attention will be paid to the practical study of the signs of diseases in the chest and abdomen. As aids to diagnosis, the orthodiagraph, syphygmograph, and syphygmomanometer will be used. Training in the methods of examining blood, sputum, gastric contents, urine, and feces will be given. The clinic has great wealth of material. Last summer the gastric contents were examined in about 150 cases.

Beginning July 3, ending July 31.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 8.30 to 12 A.M.

Fee, $30. Unlimited in number.*

32. Dr. PRATT offers a similar course beginning August 1, ending August 31.*

33. Dr. PRATT offers a similar course beginning September 1, ending September 30.*

34. Dr. PERCY MUSGRAVE. Clinical Medicine.—Clinical instruction at the Boston Dispensary. Special attention will be given to the taking of histories, general physical examination, and clinical laboratory aids to diagnosis; namely, examination of blood, urine, sputum, gastric contents, and serous fluids, particularly with reference to diagnosis, prognosis, and treatment.

Nineteen exercises, beginning July 5, ending August 16.

M., W., F., 10 to 12 A.M.

35. Dr. MUSGRAVE offers a similar course of 20 exercises, beginning August 18, ending September 29.*

36. Dr. MUSGRAVE. Cytodiagnosis.—The courses in Cytodiagnosis will consist of practical demonstrations with regard to the examination of the physical and chemical properties of serous fluids, especially the staining of sediments and diagnostic interpretations to be drawn from the stained specimens. The bacteriological examination of fluids will also be demonstrated.

Ten exercises, beginning July 10, ending July 21.

M., T., W., Th., F., 3 to 4 P.M. Laboratory of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

37. Dr. MUSGRAVE offers a similar course, beginning September 4, ending September 15.*

33. Dr. EDWIN ALLEN LOCKE. Clinical Medicine.—General medical work with special reference to diagnosis and treatment. So far as possible, the instruction will be adapted to the particular needs of each student. The course will include systematic instruction in the technique of the examination of urine, blood, sputa, and gastric contents, and the application of the results to clinical work.

Beginning September 1, ending September 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $30. Unlimited in number.*

39. Dr. FRANCIS W. PALFREY. This course will supplement and follow that of Dr. Henry Jackson, see Course 19, and is designed to illustrate modern laboratory methods in the study of disease. Under the direction of Dr. Palfrey the student will make examinations of the blood, urine, sputum, and gastric contents of the patient shown by Dr. Jackson, and specimens will be demonstrated of any autopsies which may occur in the clinic.

Twenty exercises, beginning July 6, ending August 19.

T., Th., S., 11 A.M.

Fee, $20.*

40. This course is given in the afternoons of four days each week at the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Harvard Medical School. It is designed to furnish opportunities for the study of gross pathology, blood, cytodiagnosis, sputum, urine, and gastric contents.

The First Course begins Monday, July 3, and ends Monday, July 31.

Fee, $25.*

41. The Second Course begins Tuesday, August 1, and ends Thursday, August 31.

Fee, $25.*

SURGERY.

The following courses in surgery and those in genito-urinary and orthopedic surgery are administered under the direction of Professor BURRELL.

The summer courses in surgery that are offered have been selected, so far as possible, to provide instruction in all of the more important subjects of surgery. The clinical character of the majority of these courses, and the fact that they are given in hospitals and out-patient clinics, make it necessary that the instruction should be given mostly in the forenoon. For this reason conflicts of hours are inevitable, but it is to be noted that provision has been made for certain combinations of courses, and other combinations may be arranged on application. Special courses for advanced students and opportunities for original research may be provided, by special arrangement, for those who are fitted to undertake such work.

42. DR. JOHN C. MUNRO. General Surgery.—Attendance at operations. Visits in wards. Visits to Surgical Out-patient Department. Attendance at autopsies. Dr. MUNRO operates mainly on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. Dr. BOTTOMLEY (surgeon to Carney Hospital) operates on alternate days. Students are welcome, and expected to attend these operations as well as Dr. MUNRO'S.

Week-days for one month, beginning any time, ending one month after beginning. 9 to 12 A.M. Carney Hospital.

Fee, $25. Limited to ten.

43. DR. JAMES G. MUMFORD. Major Surgery.—The surgical treatment of abdominal diseases (especially of organs concerned with digestion) will be considered. A study of patients on their entrance to the hospital will be made, palliative measures will be discussed, operative procedures will be demonstrated, and after-treatment will be followed.

Forty-eight exercises, June, July, September.

M., W., S., 9 to 11 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $30.

44. Dr. J. B. BLAKE. Major Surgery.—Dr. BLAKE will give a course in major surgery in the wards and operating-rooms of the Boston City Hospital. It will consist of ward visits, with case-taking, and examination of patients, particular attention being paid to abdominal cases, and to surgery of the alimentary tract. Diagnosis and treatment to be discussed both before and after operation. Choice of operation, technique, and details of post-operative treatment will receive special consideration. Demonstrations of common forms of intestinal suture, if desired. Arrangements may be made for notification of emergency cases, and presence at such operations is included in the course.

Twelve exercises at any time in the months of June, July, and September.

M., W., F., 10 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $25. Limited to ten.

This course and that of Dr. FAULKNER may be combined and taken as a composite course, the rectal surgery being given in the same wards on alternate days. In this way all the mornings of the week-days may be filled and the combined course become one of diagnosis and treatment in abdominal and rectal surgery, to which opportunities for study of the gross pathology of the lesion may be added in the afternoons, if the student so desires.

Fee for combined course, $40.

45. Dr. WILLIAM E. FAULKNER. Diseases of the Rectum and Anus.—Digital and proctoscopic examination of the rectum. Diagnosis and treatment of hemorrhoids, ischio-rectal abscess, fistula, fissure, benign and malignant growths. After-treatment followed in the wards.

Twelve exercises at any time in the months of July and September.

T., Th., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $20. Limited to five.

The hours of this course have been so arranged that it can be combined with Dr. J. B. BLAKE's course in Major Surgery.

Fee for combined courses, $40.

46. Drs. C. L. SCUDDER and R. B. GREENOUGH. Major Surgery.—The course is intended primarily for post-graduate work in surgery, and all of the material of one of the surgical services of the Massachusetts General Hospital will be available for demonstration and instruction. Ward visits will be made with the instructors, at which new cases for diagnosis will be examined and discussed, and the after-treatment of cases which have been operated upon will be considered. Operations will be performed before the class, and the more frequent major operations will be demonstrated. Special attention will be given to the consideration of the pathology of surgical diseases and its relation to diagnosis and operative treatment. A demonstration will be given, once a week, by Dr. C. C. SIMMONS, upon the surgical material which has collected in the Laboratory of Surgical Pathology. Arrangements may be made for notification from the Hospital of emergency operations, and attendance at such operations will be welcome. An evening hour will be arranged, once a week, at the Hospital, for the informal discussion of cases and surgical subjects by the instructors and the class

This course will be given from June 1 to September 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 A.M. to 1 P.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Twenty-four exercises, beginning any time, and ending four weeks later.

Fee, $30. Unlimited.*

47. Dr. CHANNING C. SIMMONS. Surgical Pathology.—A six weeks' practical course in surgical pathology, consisting of the gross and microscopic examination of the specimens removed at operations at the Massachusetts General Hospital. Opportunity will also be given to see certain of the cases in the wards before operation, to enable the case to be studied both from a surgical and from a pathological standpoint. The course will be given three mornings a week, from ten to twelve o'clock.

Eighteen exercises, beginning June 19, ending July 28.

M., W., F., 10 to 12 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $25. Limited to six.

48. Dr. F. B. LUND. Abdominal Surgery.—This course will consist of operations and ward visits.

Twenty-four exercises, beginning August 1, and ending either September 1 or October 1.

M., W., F. Three times a week for two months or daily for one month. Course entered at any time.

Fee, $25. Limited to four.*

49. Dr. D. F. JONES. Operative Surgery.—This course will be given with special attention to the after-care of patients operated upon.

Twenty-four exercises. June and July.

M., W., F., or T., Th., S., at 9 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $20.

This course will be repeated during August and September.

50. Dr. J. C. HUBBARD. Major Surgery.—Special attention will be given to the more common surgical diseases,—abscess, fistula in ano, hemorrhoids, etc. Diagnosis, treatment, and after-care.

Twelve exercises during June. Days to be arranged by pupils. 9 to 11 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $20. Unlimited.

This course will be repeated in July.

51. Dr. F. S. WATSON. Genito-urinary Surgery.

1. Chronic urethral inflammations and their treatment, practice in urethral irrigations; deep urethral instillations, etc.

2. Cystitis and its treatment; practice in irrigating bladder, etc.

3. Palliative treatment of prostatic hypertrophy. Examination of patients; practice in use of catheters, etc.

4. Stricture and its treatment by dilatation. Practice in passing instruments.

5. Stricture and its operative treatment.

6. Complications of stricture and their treatment. Extravasation of urine, retention of urine, periurethral abscess, etc.

7. Urinary fever and its treatment.

8. Care of instruments and the instruments used in G. U. operations.

9. Hæmaturia and its diagnostic significance.

10. Renal calculus. The urinary diatheses, and the treatment of both conditions.

11. Genito-urinary tuberculosis and its treatment. Diagnostic methods.

12. Same. The various forms under which it appears in the G. U. tract. The question of operative and climatic treatment, etc., etc.

13. Diseases of the testes and tunica vaginalis, etc. Hydrocele, orchitis, epididymitis, tubercular testis, varicocele, and their treatment.

14. Movable kidney; its diagnosis and treatment. Patients to be examined. Its importance, its palliative and its operative treatment.

15. Conditions constituting contra-indications to operations upon the genito-urinary tract.

T., Th., S., 11 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

52. Dr. PAUL THORNDIKE. Genito-urinary Surgery.—Description of and opportunities to see major operations in genito-urinary surgery. Use and place of cystoscope in diagnosis. After-care of cases as seen in ward visits.

Twenty-four exercises, July 1 to September 1.

T., Th., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $15. Limited to six.

53. Dr. L. R. G. CRANDON. Genito-urinary Surgery.—This course covers the diagnosis and treatment of out-patient genito-urinary surgery. The students will be expected to do practical work.

Twenty-six exercises during September.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $20. Unlimited in number.

54. Dr. L. R. G. CRANDON. Surgical Pathology of the Prostate.—This course will include the examination, diagnosis, and palliative treatment of the prostate. In conjunction with the clinical work there will be parallel laboratory demonstrations.

Twelve exercises. September 1 to 15.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

55. Dr. HENRY J. PERRY. Genito-urinary Diseases.—This course will be given in the Genito-Urinary Department of the Boston Dispensary, which presents a daily clinic of between 30 and 65 cases, nearly equally divided between the acute and chronic types of venereal and genito-urinary diseases, but consisting to a great extent of gonorrhœa and its complications and sequelæ. Students are expected to assist in the treatment of the patients, and will be able to acquire a reasonable technique in the use of the various methods of examination and treatment.

Twenty-five exercises, beginning June 1, ending June 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9.30 A.M. to 12.30 P.M. Boston Dispensary.

Fee, $20. Unlimited in number.

This course will be repeated in July and September.

56. Drs. F. J. COTTON and H. J. PERRY. Non-operative Genito-urinary Surgery.—A course in the diagnosis and treatment of venereal and minor genito-urinary diseases, acute and chronic. The clinic averages 40 to 50 cases a day.

Twenty-four exercises during August.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9.30 to 10.30 A.M. Boston Dispensary.

Fee, $20. Unlimited in number.

57. Dr. F. J. COTTON. Fractures.—Ward visits, twice a week, Out-patient fractures, once a week. Once a week in afternoon or evening, extra hour for study of pathological specimens in the Warren Museum, study of radiographs, etc.

In this course, diagnosis and prognosis will be considered, as well as treatment, with study of final results in old cases and notification of emergency cases at the Hospital. Students will be notified of time when apparatus is applied by the House Surgeon at other than the regular hours, and will have opportunity to see the actual technique.

Twenty exercises, beginning June 16, ending August 1.

T., Th., S., 9 to 10 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $30. Unlimited in number.

This course will be repeated during the month of September.

58. Dr. L. R. G. CRANDON. Fracture Course.—This course will afford opportunities for diagnosis and treatment of bed and ambulatory fractures.

Twenty exercises, beginning July 1, ending August 16.

M., W., F., 10 to 11 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $20.* Unlimited in number.

59, 60, 61. Dr. PERCY BROWN. Surgical Diagnostic Radiology.—A course, elementary in character, on practical X-ray negative making and interpretation for the general practitioner. Also, practice in the use of the fluoroscope. Especial attention will be given in this course to the radiographic diagnosis of chronic bone and joint diseases.

Sixteen exercises in June.

M., T., W., S., 4 to 6 P.M. The Children's Hospital

Fee, $20.* Limited to six.

This course is repeated in July, August, and September.

62. Dr. PERCY BROWN. Surgical Diagnostic Radiology.—A course for the general practitioner, elementary in character, on practical X-ray negative making and interpretation. Practice, also, in the use of the fluoroscope.

Twelve exercises in June.

Twelve exercises in July.

M., W., F., 11 A.M. to 1 P.M. Carney Hospital.

Fee, $15. Limited to six.

This course is repeated in July, August, and September.

63. Dr. GEORGE W. W. BREWSTER. Minor Surgery.—Massachusetts General Hospital, Out-patient Department, Male Surgical. The course will afford an opportunity to examine and follow the treatment of such cases as come to a surgical out-patient clinic.

Twenty-four exercises, during June and July.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

This course will be repeated during August and September.

64. Dr. FARRAR COBB. Out-patient and Minor Surgery.—Daily teaching by the instructor from 10 to 12 A.M., with an opportunity, from 9 to 10 each day, to follow up old cases of interest and do practical work under the direction of the House Officer in charge. Instruction will include the examination and diagnosis of cases which present themselves each day; surgical dressings, bandaging, and the treatment of clean and infected wounds; fractures, their diagnosis and treatment, the use of splints and fracture apparatus; minor surgical operations, technique of operations under local anæsthesia and instruction in the giving of ether.

Twenty-six exercises, beginning July 1, ending August 1.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $15. Unlimited in number.

This course is repeated in August.

65. Dr. L. R. G. CRANDON. Out-patient Surgery.—This course will include not only an ample opportunity to observe the treatment of out-patients, but will include any amount of practical work which the student may desire.

Twenty-seven exercises. July.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 to 12 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $20.* Unlimited in number.

This course is repeated in August.

66. Dr. J. S. STONE and Dr. BETH VINCENT. General Surgery of Children.—In the General Surgery Service at the Children's Hospital systematic clinical instruction will be given in all the surgical diseases, not orthopedic, which children may have. Particular attention will be given to (1) the treatment of the various congenital defects, malformations, and anomalies not of an orthopedic nature; (2) the diagnosis and treatment of the various surgical lesions of infectious origin to which children are peculiarly liable; (3) the diagnosis and treatment of hernia in children; (4) the diagnosis and treatment of fractures in children; (5) the differences due to age in the clinical course of the various surgical diseases common to adults and children; (6) the general management and care of the children. There will be ample opportunity for instruction in ordinary operations, and arrangements may be made for witnessing all emergency operations.

The instruction will be given in the wards on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings at 10.30, and on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Saturday afternoons at 3.30.

Thirty exercises. July 1 to July 31.

M., W., F., wards and operating-room, 10.30 A.M. to 12.30 P.M.

M., T., W., S., out-patient department, 3.30 to 5 P.M.

The Children's Hospital.

Fee, $20.* Limited to four.

This course will be repeated August 1 to August 30, and again repeated September 1 to September 30.

ORTHOPEDIC SURGERY.

Ample opportunity is afforded for clinical instruction in this specialty in the wards and out-patient department of the Boston Children's Hospital with its large orthopedic clinics. In addition, instruction can be obtained at the Orthopedic Department of the Massachusetts General and Carney Hospitals, with special opportunities for observation of orthopedic surgery in adults.

Advanced students desiring special pathological investigation in this specialty can obtain opportunities at the Clinical Laboratory of the Children's Hospital and the Warren Museum of the Harvard Medical School. Skiagraphy applied to deformities can also be studied.

Properly qualified applicants may be assigned to clinical work.

67. Dr. BRADFORD, associated with Drs. SOUTTER, ADAMS, KEEN, and BROWN, at the Children's Hospital and Harvard Medical School.

Arrangements can be made for instruction at the following hours:—

JULY

Mondays, Children's Hospital, 3 to 5 P.M. "Diagnosis and treatment of tuberculous joint affections."

Tuesdays, Children's Hospital, 9 to 11 A.M. "Orthopedic operations and clinical demonstrations."

3 to 5 P.M. "Application, measurements, and designing of apparatus."

Wednesdays, Children's Hospital, 3 to 5 P.M. "Diagnosis and treatment of non-tuberculous deformities."

Thursdays, Children's Hospital, 9 to 11 A.M. "Orthopedic operations and clinical demonstrations."

Warren Museum and Children's Hospital, 4 to 5 P.M. "Pathological anatomy." "Applied skiagraphy."

Fridays, Children's Hospital, 4 to 5 P.M. "Details of larger operations in orthopedic surgery." "Principles of treatment of lateral curvature."

Saturdays, Children's Hospital, 3 to 5 P.M. "Plaster of Paris work."

Fee, $25.* Course limited to five.

A similar course is offered in August.

68. Dr. R. W. LOVETT. Out-patient work, diagnosis of common orthopedic conditions, measurement for apparatus, fitting of apparatus, plaster of Paris bandages. Lateral curvature, its gymnastic treatment and its forcible rectification. Chiefly in the out-patient department. Work in the wards, ward visits, diagnosis.

Eighteen exercises, beginning July 1, ending August 15.

T., 3 to 4.30 P.M.; S., 10 to 11 A.M. and 3 to 4.30 P.M. Children's Hospital.

Fee, $25.* Unlimited in number.

69. Dr. JOEL E. GOLDTHWAIT. A three weeks' course in general orthopedic surgery given at the Carney Hospital on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays at 9 A.M., and at the Massachusetts General Hospital on Wednesdays at 10.30 A.M., together with pathological work at the office.

Twelve exercises, beginning July 3, ending July 31.

Carney Hospital and Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $25.* Limited to six.

A similar course is offered in August and September.

70. Drs. E. G. BRACKETT and JOHN DANE. Clinical exercises of one or two hours each. Instruction in diagnosis and treatment of orthopedic affections, with special training in the measurement and application of apparatus.

Twelve exercises, beginning July 3, ending August 14.

M., W., 3.30 P.M. Children's Hospital.

Fee, $20. Limited to six.

OBSTETRICS AND GYNECOLOGY.

Obstetrics.

71. Dr. HOWARD T. SWAIN, assisted by Dr. LEO V. FRIEDMAN and Dr. JAMES R. TORBERT. Clinical Obstetrics.—At the Boston Lying-in Hospital. To consist of lectures, conferences, bedside teaching, and the personal care of cases. From May to October, students are assigned in rotation to positions as externes of the Hospital, for periods of two weeks, eight students on duty at a time. The externes take charge of the out-patient cases, receiving advice, assistance, and clinical teaching in their work. During his two-week periods of work the externe lodges in the Hospital and is subject to its rules. Following each two-week period of hospital residence, during which time the externe has attended from ten to fifteen patients, the student provides his own lodging outside the Hospital, and devotes himself to following the convalescence of his cases and to writing full reports of them for the hospital records. From a week to ten days is required to complete this latter portion of his duty, so that in all a period of work takes about three weeks. Students may take from one to four of these three-week periods, according to the time at their disposal and their desire for clinical experience.

The course is open to graduates, and to undergraduates who have studied medicine at least two years. To meet the needs of undergraduates who have not had their regular didactic instruction in obstetrics, a course of lectures is given during March, April, and May. The lectures will take place either at the Hospital or at the Medical School, two each week, at hours convenient for the class.

The conferences will be held at the Hospital, on Mondays, at 12 o'clock noon, during the summer. At these exercises, reports of cases are read, criticised, and discussed, and personal instruction is given to meet the needs of individual students.

Applications for this course should be made in person, if possible, otherwise by letter, to Dr. SWAIN, who decides in each case as to the competency of the applicant to take the course; and applications should be made as long in advance as possible, in order that assignments to service may be conveniently arranged.

Fee, $30.

Three courses in Clinical Obstetrics will be given at the Boston Lying-in Hospital, at 11 A.M., on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, in July, August, and September, respectively. In these courses, students will be given opportunity to witness normal and operative deliveries, will be instructed in pelvimetry, in making the diagnosis of position and presentation by external examination, and in the general management of labor; special attention will be given to the study of puerperal convalescence and to the care of the young infant. The courses are open to graduates and to fourth-year students.

Fee, $20.

72. Dr. HOWARD T. SWAIN will give the course in July.

73. Dr. LEO V. FRIEDMAN will give the course in August.

74. Dr. JAMES R. TORBERT will give the course in September.

Gynecology.

75. Dr. MALCOLM STORER. Operative Gynecology.—At the Carney Hospital, from April 1 to October 1. The courses are open to graduates and fourth-year students, who will have the privilege of attending all operations. It is hoped that it will be possible to allow each student to act as first assistant at one, at least, of the various operations performed. The indications for operation, the technique, and expected results are explained in detail. A course consists of two forenoons a week for six weeks; but, while the course nominally consists of twelve exercises, students are welcome to attend on other operating days, which often number three or four a week. Students may begin a course at any time, and continue for six weeks. Fee, $25.*

Three courses in Clinical and Operative Gynecology will be given in the wards of the Boston City Hospital, from 9 to 11 o'clock on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, in July, August, and September, respectively. In these courses, students will be given opportunity to follow the work of the service, to witness operations, major and minor, and to study convalescence. These courses are open to graduates and to fourth-year students. Fee, $25.

76. Dr. FRANKLIN S. NEWELL will give the course in July.

77. Dr. FRANKLIN S. NEWELL will give the course in August.

78. Dr. ERNEST B. YOUNG will give the course in September.

79, 80, 81. Dr. LEO V. FRIEDMAN will give three courses in Minor Gynecology in the Out-patient Department of the Boston City Hospital, from 9 to 11 o'clock, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, in July, August, and September, respectively. Students will be instructed in the examination and diagnosis of cases and in the treatment applicable to out-patients. These courses are open to graduates and to third-year and fourth-year students. Fee, $20.

PEDIATRICS.

The Department of Pediatrics is able during the summer to make use of the Out-patient Department at the Infants' Hospital, of the Out-patient Department and the medical wards at the Children's Hospital, and, for a time, of the wards of the Floating Hospital.

80 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

The Department of Pediatrics has arranged the following courses for the summer, short courses being arranged for June and July, and long courses for August and September. These courses are as follows:—

82. June. Dr. JOHN LOVETT MORSE. Pediatrics.—A clinical course given in the wards of the Infants' Hospital, devoted largely to the care and feeding, physical examination, and treatment of infants. Practical rather than theoretical.

Thirteen exercises, beginning June 2, ending June 29.

M., W., F., 11.30 A.M. Infants' Hospital, 37 Blossom Street.

Fee, $20.* Unlimited in number.

83. July. Dr. CHARLES HUNTER DUNN. Pediatrics.—A clinical course given in the out-patient department of the Infants' Hospital, devoted chiefly to the diagnosis and treatment of diseases of infants and children.

Thirteen exercises, beginning July 3, ending July 31.

M., W., F., 11 A.M. Infants' Hospital, 37 Blossom Street.

Fee, $20.* Unlimited in number.

SYPHILIS.

84. Dr. ABNER POST. Syphilis.

Eighteen exercises, beginning June 5, ending July 14.

M., W., F., 11 A.M. to 12.30 P.M. Boston Dispensary.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

85. Dr. ABNER POST. Syphilis.

Eighteen exercises, beginning July 14, ending August 30.

M., W., F., 11 A.M. to 12.30 P.M. Boston Dispensary.

OPHTHALMOLOGY.

86. Dr. MILES STANDISH. Ocular Symptoms in General Diseases.—Each exercise will consist of a thirty-minute talk on the relation of some groups of ocular symptoms to general diseases and the relative importance of these symptoms, after which methods of observation and cases will be demonstrated.

Application should be made by May 1.

Fourteen exercises, beginning June 1, ending July 1.

T., Th., S., 9 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Fee, $30.* Limited to three.

87. Dr. EDWIN E. JACK. Ophthalmology.—Largely operative. Visiting the wards. Observation of serious cases of eye disease and injury.

Fifteen exercises, beginning any time in August and September.

T., Th., S., 10 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Fee, $30. Limited to two.

88. Dr. ALEXANDER QUACKENBOSS. Ophthalmology.—The course is clinical, and will consist of ward visits and operations upon the eye.

Twenty-four exercises, beginning August 2, ending September 23.

M., W., F., 9 to 12 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Fee, $25.* Unlimited in number.

89. Dr. F. M. SPALDING. Ophthalmology.—The course will be essentially clinical in character. Special attention will be paid to conditions of the eye occurring in diseases of the nervous system. Opportunity will be given to study cases with the ophthalmoscope and perimeter.

Twelve exercises, beginning July 3, ending July 28.

M., W., F., 9 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary and Long Island Hospital.

Fee, $25.* Unlimited in number.

OTOLOGY.

90. Professor CLARENCE JOHN BLAKE. Otology.—Demonstration and explanation of operations on the middle ear and mastoid in cases occurring in the house service of the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Twelve exercises, beginning June 1, ending June 27.

T., Th., S., 10 to 12 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Fee, $25.* Limited to four.

91. Dr. PHILIP HAMMOND. Clinical Otology.—Instruction to be mainly in the out-patient department, and to consist of examination and treatment of out-patient cases in ear, nose, and nasopharyngeal diseases. The student, if proficient, will be able to pass the Eustachian catheter, and perform all the small operations, such as paracentesis. Some instruction may be given, as occasion offers, in mastoid and other of the more severe otological operations.

The out-patient clinic will average somewhat over one hundred patients a day.

Twenty-four exercises, beginning June 1, ending June 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 to 11 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Fee, $25.* Limited to two.

92. Dr. PHILIP HAMMOND. Clinical Otology.—Instruction to be mainly in the out-patient department, and to consist of examination and treatment of out-patient cases in ear, nose, and nasopharyngeal diseases. The student, if proficient, will be able to pass the Eustachian catheter, and perform all the small operations, such as paracentesis. Some instruction may be given, as occasion offers, in mastoid and other of the more severe otological operations.

The out-patient clinic will average somewhat over one hundred patients a day.

Twenty-six exercises, beginning July 1, ending July 30.

M., T., W., Th., F., S., 9 to 11 A.M. Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Fee, $25.* Limited to two.

93. Dr. E. DEW. WALES. Anatomy of the Ear.—The course comprises a most minute review of the anatomy of the temporal bone, illustrated by sections. During the latter half of the course, the student is permitted to perform all the ordinary operations on the middle ear and mastoid upon the cadaver, under the supervision of the instructor.

Thirteen exercises, beginning July 1, ending July 29.

M., W., F., 9 to 11 A.M. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $25.* Unlimited in number.

NEUROLOGY.

The courses are under the direction of Professor J. J. PUTNAM. He may be addressed for further information.

94. Dr. E. W. TAYLOR. Neurology.—The anatomy and pathological anatomy of the nervous system requisite for a proper understanding of clinical phenomena will be taught. The attempt will be made to show the relationship of laboratory and clinical methods of neurological research. This will be done by personal study of anatomical and pathological material, combined with a study of the phenomena of disease as observed during life. For this latter purpose the large neurological clinic of the Long Island Hospital, Boston Harbor, will be of immediate practical utility, and also serve as a basis for more extended neurological work.

Twenty exercises, beginning July 5, ending August 5.

T., Th., 9 to 12 A.M.; W., S., 9 to 11 A.M. Harvard Medical School, Long Island Hospital.

Fee, $30.* Unlimited in number.

95. Dr. E. W. TAYLOR. Anatomy of Central Nervous System.—The object of this course is to give the student a knowledge of the gross and minute anatomy of the central nervous system with special reference to the course of fibres, and to the nuclei of the cranial nerves. Methods of instruction will be in part didactic, but chiefly by demonstration and individual study of actual sections of the cord and brain. Microscopes will be necessary.

Fifteen exercises, beginning July 5.

M., W., F., 4 P.M. Harvard Medical School.

Fee, $25. Unlimited in number.

96. Dr. G. A. WATERMAN. Neurological Diseases Associated with the Eye.—This course is offered for the benefit of ophthalmic students who may wish to supplement their special work by acquiring a familiarity with the functional and organic disorders of the nervous system that occur in conjunction with disorders of the eye. Patients will be demonstrated at the Neurological Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Long Island Hospital.

Four exercises,* August 2 to August 11.

W., F., 10 to 11 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

Fee, $6. Unlimited in number.

97. Dr. G. A. WATERMAN. Clinical Neurology.—The object of this course is to give a general knowledge of the functional and organic diseases of the nervous system, their diagnosis and treatment. The course will include electro-therapeutics and electro-diagnosis, and will give a general idea of the application of mechanical therapeutics. Ample opportunity for study will be afforded by the Out-Patient Neurological Department of the Massachusetts General Hospital and by the Long Island Hospital.

Exercises, July 3 to July 28.

M., W., F., 10 to 11 A.M. Massachusetts General Hospital.

A similar course will be given M., W., F., from August 2 to August 30.

LARYNGOLOGY.

98. Dr. JOHN W. FARLOW. Diseases of Nose and Throat.—Clinical instruction in examination and treatment of patients.

Twelve exercises, beginning June 2, ending June 28.

M., W., F., 10 A.M. Boston City Hospital.

Fee, $20.* Unlimited in number.

99. Dr. J. PAYSON CLARK. Laryngology.—Clinical; manner of using instruments for examination; demonstration of cases; opportunities for examination and diagnosis, for seeing treatment and operations, sometimes for giving treatment or doing some operations under the direction of the instructor.

Eighteen exercises, beginning June 1, ending July 11.

REDUCED RAILWAY FARES.

Arrangements have been made whereby persons attending the Harvard Summer School may secure a substantial reduction in railway fares either by the Certificate Plan or by a combination of the Certificate Plan with the reduced rates available for persons attending the annual meeting of the National Educational Association at Asbury Park, N.J.

Further information will be found in the official announcement of the Summer School, to be had of the Secretary on application.

OBITUARY.

1832. Dr. Edward Linzee Cunningham died at his home in Newport, R.I., of diseases incident to old age, having about three weeks before celebrated his ninety-fifth birthday. He had been in excellent health for one of his years until a few days before his death. He fell on the ice on his return home from his daily walk to Thames Street five days before he died, and, although this accident caused no apparent injury, it is evident that it hastened the end, as during these last days he failed steadily.

He was born on Pemberton Square in Boston, Jan. 2, 1810. His mother was Miss Linzee, a daughter of Captain Linzee, of England. He fitted at the Boston Latin School, and entered Harvard with the class of 1829. In this famous class were fifty-nine members, including Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, Rev. Samuel F. Smith, the author of "America," Francis B. Crowningshield, William H. Channing, Charles S. Storrow, Benjamin Robbins Curtis, William Gray, Benjamin Peirce, and other distinguished men. He was Latin salutatorian and second on the list of honor men. He received his A.M. and M.D. degrees from the University in 1832.

Being possessed of considerable means, he never practised his profession, although he always took a deep interest in it and its advances. He gave up his residence in Boston in 1864, and went to Newport to reside permanently. Here he was greatly interested in Trinity Church, and was invariably present at its services, notwithstanding the severity of the weather. He was for many years treasurer of All Saints' Memorial Chapel on Cottage Street. Dr. Cunningham was a man of culture and high literary attainments. He wrote poetry of merit, and spent his time with his books and his friends. He was a charitable man, and gave much to the poor.

Dr. Cunningham was twice married. His first wife was Miss Adeline Amory, of Boston. His second wife came from Mobile, Ala., a sister of Mrs. J. Amory DeBlois, mother of Dr. J. Amory DeBlois, of Boston, and the widow of Nathaniel James DeBlois.

In college he was a member of the Hasty Pudding and Porcellian Clubs. When possible, Dr. Cunningham always attended the annual dinner of the Harvard Club of Rhode Island, and, when not able to be present, sent a cordial letter, which was read, and then the members, standing, offered a toast to their venerable associate.

For some years Charles Storrow and Dr. Cunningham were the two survivors of the class of 1829. The fact is recalled that he was present at the class dinner, Jan. 10, 1878, when Dr. Holmes read the poem now vividly called to mind, "The Last Survivor."

Who knows this ancient graduate of fourscore years and ten,—
What place he held, what name he bore among the sons of men?
So speeds the curious question; its answer travels slow;
"Tis the last of sixty classmates of seventy years ago."

His figure shows but dimly, his face I scarce can see,— There's something that reminds me,—it looks like—is it he?
He? Who? No voice may whisper what wrinkled brow shall claim
The wreath of stars that circles our last survivor's name.

Farewell! our skies are darkened and yet the stars will shine,
We'll close our ranks together and still fall into line
Till one is left, one only, to mourn for all the rest;
And Heaven bequeath their memories to him who loves us best!

1852. Dr. Samuel Morrill died at his home in Farmville, N.C., Feb. 25, 1905. He was born Aug. 26, 1829, at Goffstown, N.H., and was the second son of David L. Morrill, a physician in early life and later governor and United States senator from New Hampshire.

Dr. Morrill entered Dartmouth College (Sophomore Class) in 1846, where he remained three years. He then began the study of medicine in the office of Timothy Haynes, of Concord, N.H., and later completed his studies, receiving the degree of M.D. from Harvard in 1852. He practised his profession in East Northwood for a while, but went South in 1853. In 1854 he settled in Pitt County, North Carolina, where he afterward remained, and where for more than fifty years he engaged actively in the practice of medicine.

During these long years of varied experiences Dr. Morrill, by his warm and sympathetic heart, strong sense of duty, and self-sacrificing disposition, made for himself a reputation, the thought of which is now of inestimable comfort to his family. He had always been a strong and healthy man, and until October, 1904, was in his usual health. On that day, on returning from the bedside of a patient, he was stricken with a severe attack of laryngitis, followed by la grippe, from which he never rallied.

Dr. Morrill, like his honored father, was true and just in all his dealings with his fellow-men. He was a scholarly physician of unusual capacity, and in his practice never drew a line of demarcation between the weak and the strong. He was strongly attached to the doctrines of the established church, and for many years had been a communicant of the same.

The wife of his youth, Sarah Elizabeth Virgin, daughter of the late Joel B. Virgin, of Northwood, N.H., survives him, with four sons and two daughters.

1856. Dr. Conrad Wesselhoeft, born at Weimar, Germany, March 23, 1834, died at Newton Centre, Dec. 17, 1904. He came to America with his parents (Robert and Ferdinanda E. Wesselhoeft) when a mere lad. He received his professional education at the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1856. He engaged at once in practice, and became one of the chief physicians of the homœopathic school in America. He served in the Boston Homœopathic Dispensary. He was a trustee of the Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, and almost up to the time of his death had a term of service there. He was also chairman of the consulting board of physicians and surgeons of the Westboro Insane Hospital. He was president of the American Institute of Homœopathy in 1879, and had also been president of the Massachusetts Homœopathic Medical Society and president of the Boston Society. He filled the chair of pathology and therapeutics at the Boston University Medical School with distinguished ability. As a medical author, his work covered a wide range, the most notable of his writings being a translation of the "Organon" of Hahnemann. He was one of the committee for preparing the Cyclopædia of Drug Pathogenesis, was one of the committee also for publishing the Pharmacopœia of the American Institute of Homœopathy, and his writings for journals and medical societies have been very numerous. Dr. Wesselhoeft married Elizabeth Foster Pope, who survives him. He also leaves a daughter, Mrs. George B. Glidden, with whom he made his home, at 661 Boylston Street. Last March more than two hundred of his friends and associates celebrated his seventieth birthday by a banquet, and presented him with a loving-cup and a purse of $2,000.

1857. Dr. James David Hoyl died at his home in Fort Valley, Ga., Dec. 26, 1904, from chronic bronchitis, after an illness of one year, aged seventy years.

1861. Dr. Francis LeBaron Monroe, a veteran of the Civil War, died suddenly at Woburn, Mass., on Aug. 14, 1904. He was born in Medway, March 20, 1836. After two years at Yale he transferred to Williams College, graduating in 1857. He graduated from the Harvard Medical School in 1861. When the Civil War broke out, Dr. Monroe was attached to Follett's Battery during its three months' service. He was then made assistant surgeon of the First Massachusetts Infantry under Dr. S. A. Green (1851). At the end of two years Dr. Monroe was made surgeon of the Fifteenth Massachusetts. Later he was appointed medical director of the Fifth Corps, under General Warren, and became a close friend of General F. A. Walker, of Warren's staff. At the close of the war he was sent to Gallup's Island, Boston Harbor, and daily visited Fort Warren, where he had, among other patients, A. H. Stephens, vice-president, and J. H. Reagan, postmaster-general, of the Southern Confederacy. Subsequently he was commissioned assistant surgeon in the regular army, and served at Fort Fetterman on the plains and at Chicago. His wife's health failed, and he retired from the army and settled at her home, Meriden, N.H. He gave up the practice of medicine. He filled for several years an appraiser's position at the custom-house, Boston, residing during that period in Cambridge. His wife, two daughters, and a sister survive him.

1866. Dr. Francis Boott Greenough died in Brookline, Oct. 16, 1904.

He was the son of Henry and Frances (Boott) Greenough, and was born in Boston, Dec. 24, 1837. He was fitted for college at the private school of T. G. Bradford (1822). After graduation he studied architecture for two years in Europe, and then medicine, and took the degree of M.D. at Harvard in 1866. During the summer of 1864 he was acting assistant surgeon, U.S.A., and was stationed at the Lowell General Hospital at Portsmouth Grove, R.I. He practised medicine in Boston for many years, and was lecturer first, and then instructor, in the Harvard Medical School from 1871 to 1895. His name will be preserved by the F. B. Greenough Fund for Surgical Research, established in Harvard Medical School in 1901, by his sister, Mrs. Arthur W. Blake.

1878. Dr. William Wotkyns Seymour died at his home in Troy, N.Y., Oct. 18, 1904. Dr. Seymour was born in Troy, July 23, 1853. After graduating A.B. from Yale in 1875, he studied at the Harvard Medical School, and took the degree of M.D. For a time he was house physician in the City Hospital of Boston, and then went abroad, where he studied medicine and surgery in the best schools in London, Germany, and Austria. Since 1883 he has practised his profession at Troy. He was for years a contributor to medical journals, and was known as an authority on many matters relating to his profession. From 1891 to 1893 he was assistant surgeon of the Sixth Separate Company of Troy. When the Samaritan Hospital was established in 1896, he was among the trustees, and was also an attending surgeon of the house staff. He was a member of the Rensselaer County Medical Association, Harvard Medical Alumni Association, Harvard Union, New York State Medical Association, Sons of the American Revolution, Yale Club of New York City, Boston City Hospital Club, American Medical Association, British Medical Association, American Association of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, the Medical Society of Troy, the Troy Club, and the Laureate Boat Club. He translated from the German Kehr's "Diagnosis of Gallstone Disease." In college he was prominent in athletics, and was particularly known for his ability in rowing and boxing. About four years ago he offered prizes for Yale wrestlers, and he continued these prizes until last fall, when he became dissatisfied with the lack of general interest in wrestling and withdrew the cups. Dr. Seymour is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Frances Minturn, of Shoreham, Vt., to whom he was married in 1883, and by two daughters.

1879. Dr. George Frederick Keene died at his home in Howard, R.I., March 13, 1905, from pneumonia complicated with nephritis, after an illness of only five days, aged fifty-one. He was a member of the American Medical Association, superintendent of the State Hospital for the Insane, Cranston, R.I., a member and once president of the Rhode Island Medical Society, member of the American Academy of Medicine, American Medico-Psychological Society, New York Medico-legal Society, Rhode Island Clinical Society, Providence Medical Association, Rhode Island Medico-legal Society, etc., and one of the leading alienists of the East.

1879. Dr. Willis P. Spring, formerly coroner of Hennepin County, died at St. Barnabas Hospital, Minneapolis, March 22, 1905, from illuminating gas poisoning. Several physicians worked over him, but eighteen hours of effort failed to break the coma. The unconscious body of Dr. Spring was found by his son Arthur in the dark room of his office at 329 Nicollet Avenue, where he had been developing photographs. The room was filled with gas, which had escaped from a gas heater in the room; and the door was locked, and had to be forced.

Dr. Spring went to his office to develop some photographs he had made. He did not return home at noon, and his family could get no response to telephone messages. In the afternoon his son went to the office, and found the waiting-room door open. The dark-room door was closed and locked, and Dr. Linjer, who occupies adjoining offices, told the son that Dr. Spring was in the dark room. A policeman was summoned, and he called a fireman, who broke the door with an axe. It is supposed that, while Dr. Spring was at work in the dark room, he inadvertently turned the gas jet, and allowed the gas to escape. Not noticing the odor, he inhaled enough of the fluid to destroy consciousness. How long he had been in the room when found is not known.

After Dr. Spring retired to private practice from the office of county coroner, he became physician for the Soo line. He had a host of friends in and out of the profession, and more than a dozen physicians went to the hospital to offer their assistance. Dr. Spring was fifty-one years old, and was graduated from Harvard Medical School in the class of 1879. His home was at 2200 First Avenue South.

1887. Dr. Thomas Francis Padula died in Quincy, Mass., Feb. 9, 1905, aged forty-five years.

1897. Dr. John M. Donlan, a noted athlete, died at his home in Fitchburg, Mass., from consumption, after a long illness, Jan. 26, 1905, aged thirty-one years.

1900. Dr. Edward Jones Belt died Oct. 8, 1904. He was born at South Boston, June 6, 1876. After practising for a while at South Boston, he removed to Enfield for a year, and thence to Springfield.

ADMISSION OF STUDENTS.

Candidates for admission to this school must present a degree in arts, literature, philosophy, or science, from a recognized college or scientific school, with the exception of such persons of suitable age and attainments as may be admitted by special vote of the Administrative Board in each case.

All candidates, whether presenting a degree or not, are required to satisfy the Faculty that they have had a course in theoretical and descriptive (inorganic) chemistry and qualitative analysis sufficient to fit them to pursue the courses in chemistry given at the Medical School, or, failing in this, to pass an examination in general chemistry and qualitative analysis. Students who are unable to fulfil either of these requirements may enter conditioned in chemistry; but no student will be permitted to take part in any exercise of the third class, or to present himself for examination in the subjects of that class, until deficiencies in general chemistry and qualitative analysis have been made up.

The admission examination in general chemistry (at which time also the note-books in Qualitative Analysis must be handed in) is held at the Medical School, 688 Boylston Street, Boston, at 12 o'clock, noon, on the Thursday following the last Wednesday in June and on the last Wednesday in September. The examination is conducted in writing. Specimen examination papers may be found in the Medical School Catalogues.

In and after September, 1907, a knowledge of elementary organic chemistry will be required for admission.

ORDER OF STUDIES.

FIRST YEAR.—First Term, Anatomy and Histology. Second Term, Physiology and Physiological and Pathological Chemistry.

SECOND YEAR.—First Term, Bacteriology and Pathology. Second Term, Hygiene, Materia Medica and Pharmacology, Theory and Practice, Clinical Medicine, and Surgery.

THIRD YEAR.—Theory and Practice, Pediatrics, Surgery, Obstetrics, Gynecology, Dermatology, Neurology, Psychiatry, Clinical Medicine, Clinical Surgery, Genito-urinary Surgery.

FOURTH YEAR.—Required Studies: Clinical Medicine, Clinical Surgery, Orthopedics, Syphilis, Ophthalmology, Otology, Laryngology, Legal Medicine, Hygiene, Clinical Microscopy, Genito-urinary Surgery, Psychiatry, and Municipal Sanitation. Elective Studies: Anatomy, Advanced Histology, Histology of the Nervous System, Embryology, Physiology, Physiological Chemistry, Clinical Chemistry, Bacteriology, Comparative Etiology of Infectious Diseases, Clinical Microscopy, Operative Surgery, Orthopedics, Operative Obstetrics, Gynecology, Dermatology, Neurology, Ophthalmology, Otology, Hygiene.

The Bulletin of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association is published in April, July, and October of each year.

Members of the Association will receive these publications as they appear, without other expense than the annual dues. These are payable to the Treasurer on the first of May, and are $3 each triennial year.

Those who are not eligible to membership in the Association may subscribe to the Bulletin at $1 per year; single numbers, 25 cents.

Address, The Secretary of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association, care of the Boston Medical Library, 8 The Fenway, Boston, Mass.

THE FOURTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING.

The fourteenth annual meeting of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association was held on June 27, 1905, in lecture-room "A" of the Harvard Medical School.

The meeting was called to order at 12 M., with the President, Dr. Charles F. Folsom, in the chair.

THE PRESIDENT. There is no provision in the constitution as to how many members shall constitute a quorum at the annual meeting of the Association. Has any gentleman a motion to make?

DR. GEORGE W. GAY. Mr. President, I move that the members present constitute a quorum for the transaction of the business of this meeting.

The motion was seconded and passed.

THE PRESIDENT. The first business is the report of the Secretary.

Dr. David Cheever, Secretary pro tem., read the report, which was accepted by the Association.

THE PRESIDENT. The next business is the report of the Treasurer, but, as Dr. Prescott is apparently not yet present, this will have to be deferred until his arrival.

The next business is the election of officers. Since the last annual meeting Drs. George S. Whiteside and John G. W. Knowlton have resigned their respective positions of Secretary and Assistant Secretary. The Association was fortunate enough to obtain the services of Dr. David Cheever as Secretary pro tem, and he was appointed to that position by the Council at its meeting of Aug. 25, 1904, since which time he has discharged the duties of Secretary. I understand that Dr. Cheever is willing to accept the formal election as Secretary of the Association.

Dr. Cheever was unanimously elected Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT. The next officers to be elected are three Councillors for the term of four years, 1905 to 1909, to take the places of Drs. Matthew V. Pierce, Frank Piper, and Harvey W. Cushing, whose terms expire.

The Council has made six nominations for these three vacancies, as follows:—

Frank L. Day, A.B. 1885, A.M. 1888 (Brown University), M.D. 1889, of Providence, R.I.; Surgical Interne, Boston City Hospital; Visiting Physician to the Rhode Island Hospital; Consulting Physician to St. Joseph's Hospital, etc.

William Castein Mason, A.B. 1874, M.D. 1878, of Bangor, Me.; Surgical Interne, Massachusetts General Hospital; Visiting Surgeon to the Eastern Maine General Hospital; Acting Assistant Surgeon to the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service; Consulting Physician to the Home for Aged Women, etc.

James Gregory Mumford, A.B. 1886, M.D. 1890, of Boston, Mass.; Surgeon to the Massachusetts General Hospital; Instructor in Surgery, Harvard Medical School.

Ralph H. Seelye, A.B. (Amherst), M.D. 1890, of Springfield, Mass. (Particulars not supplied.)

William N. Swift, A.B. 1877, M.D. 1881, of New Bedford, Mass.; Surgical Interne, Massachusetts General Hospital, 1880; Surgeon to St. Luke's Hospital, etc.

Samuel B. Woodward, A.B. 1874, M.D. 1878, of Worcester, Mass.; Surgical Interne, Boston City Hospital; Consulting Surgeon to the Worcester City Hospital and to St. Vincent's Hospital; Visiting Surgeon to the Memorial Hospital, etc.

Please mark on the ballot your choice of three Councillors from this list. I will ask Dr. Thomas and Dr. Mason to be so kind as to act as tellers to collect and count ballots and report the result.

During the last several years, as you all know, numerous changes have taken place in the curriculum of our school, the last of which is a complete reorganization of the fourth year. We are fortunate in having secured Dr. Frank B. Mallory, who has been intimately concerned in these matters, to explain to the Association the most important of the changes which have occurred. While the tellers are counting the ballots, I will ask Dr. Mallory to speak to us. (See page 107.)

At the conclusion of Dr. Mallory's address Dr. Thomas and Dr. Mason reported that Drs. James G. Mumford, Samuel B. Woodward, and William N. Swift received the most votes, and were elected Councillors of the Association.

THE PRESIDENT. I am sure we are very much indebted to Dr. Mallory for the clear exposition of school affairs that he has given us, and I take pleasure in extending the thanks of the Association to him. It is a striking fact, as shown by the statistics of the present fourth-year class, that comparatively few men elect to pursue specialties during their work in the school. Apparently, the older scholars wish to make their school work as broad as possible and specialize later in post-graduate courses.

I see that Dr. Prescott, the Treasurer, has arrived, and his report is now in order.

DR. PRESCOTT. I regret exceedingly, Mr. President, that I was obliged to be late, owing to an unavoidable cause.

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Gentlemen,—I herewith submit my annual report for the year 1904-05:—

Balance on hand as per last report:—

In Old Colony Trust Company (and on hand)	$915.64
Willey Savings Bank, General Fund	654.32
Willey Savings Bank, Life Membership Fund	1,521.07
	$3,091.03

Received interest, General Fund	26.42
Received interest, Life Membership	62.04
Received for Life Membership	20.00
Received dues, sales of Quarterly, and interest	227.50
	$3,426.99
Special Fund from Dr. C. J. Blake	1,786.41
	$5,213.40

Expenses:—

George H. Ellis Co., Bulletin, printing, etc.	$664.18
Advertising	7.25
Report of annual meeting	8.00
Stenographer, etc.	85.75
Spreads	172.09
School for Crippled Children	3.00
Treasurer	100.00
Exchange65
	$1,040.92
Brought forward	$4,172.48
Investment Special Fund	1,728.00
	$2,444.48
Balance Special Fund, held for deposit or interest	58.41
	$2,386.07

Balance:—

General Fund, Savings Bank	$680.74
Life Fund, Savings Bank	1,603.11
Old Colony Trust Company, and on hand	102.22
	$2,386.07

This shows that the expenses were $704.96 more than receipts, but, as we have in the General Fund nearly $800, we can in all probability pay all the expenses before the returns begin to come in from the bills next year. I would recommend that the Secretary be paid a salary, and that the salary of the Treasurer be paid only once in three years; that is, that the Treasurer receive a salary only for the year in which the bills are sent out. I would also recommend that the Special Fund be kept intact for the present.

The Bulletin continues to prove acceptable, but there is a great deal of routine work connected with it; and I would ask the members to assist the Secretary to the extent of their ability. Fourteen members of the class of 1905 have joined the Association. The membership remains about the same as at the last report.

Respectfully submitted,

WILLIAM H. PRESCOTT.

The report of the Treasurer was accepted as read.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, you have heard the recommendations in the Treasurer's report. Is there any discussion?

A MEMBER. I move that the entire report of the Treasurer, together with his recommendations, be accepted.

This motion was carried.

THE PRESIDENT. What salary is it the wish of the Association to pay to the Secretary?

A MEMBER. Would it not be a good plan to refer this matter to the Executive Committee or to the Council?

DR. GEORGE W. GAY. Mr. President, I move that the Secretary be paid $100 per year.

Seconded and passed.

DR. CUTTER. Mr. President, it seems to me $100 a year is entirely inadequate as a salary for the Secretary, and I move that he shall be paid $200 a year, and that we pass an amendment to Dr. Gay's motion to that effect.

DR. GAY. I realize that the salary proposed is inadequate, but, unfortunately, we must consider whether or not the treasury can stand a larger one. What does Dr. Prescott say?

DR. PRESCOTT. No salary that the Association can afford to pay will adequately remunerate the Secretary for his time expended in the routine business of the office and in the preparation and editing of the Bulletin, but I am afraid that $100 a year is all that we can stand at the present without increasing the assessment.

DR. CUTTER. In view of the Treasurer's statement I beg to withdraw my amendment.

THE PRESIDENT. Is there any further or incidental business to come before the meeting?

The usual spread will be served to-morrow in Stoughton in the college yard. Owing to the expected presence of President Roosevelt, the public will be excluded, and tickets will be necessary for admission. The Secretary asks me to say that he still has some tickets left to be distributed immediately after the meeting, if any member is not yet supplied.

The collation is served upstairs in lecture-room "E," where I hope we shall all meet again.

The meeting adjourned at 12.50 o'clock.

RECENT CHANGES IN THE CURRICULUM OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL.

BY FRANK B. MALLORY, M.D.

The changes which have been made in the course of study in the school during the last six years are the result of the joint action of the Committee on Medical Education and the Committee on Course of Study. Three groups of changes have been made.

1. In the year 1899-1900 the so-called concentration or block system of instruction went into effect. It had to do with the teaching of the first year and a half. The principle involved was that of having the student study but one subject or correlated group of subjects at a time. In accordance with this plan the subjects of anatomy, physiology, and pathology occupy each half a school year. Under anatomy are included histology and embryology, under physiology physiological and pathological chemistry, under pathology surgical pathology, neuropathology, and animal parasites.

This experiment in teaching has worked well during the period of six years it has been on trial. Little adverse criticism of the method has been made, and no demand to return to the old arrangement of courses. A criticism which might justly be made is that pathological chemistry does not belong under physiology, but should be taught during the third year in connection with medicine. In like manner it is possible that surgical pathology and neuropathology ought also to be postponed until the third year, and taught in conjunction with the special clinical subjects with which they are related.

2. The second change was adopted in 1902, to begin with the class entering that year. It affected the instruction of the second half of the second year and all of the third and fourth years. The change proposed involved putting all required instruction into the first three years and leaving the fourth year entirely elective. To bring about this result, the required subjects of the fourth year were brought into the third year,—a change which necessitated a small amount of condensation of most of the subjects concerned. Under this scheme the second half of the second year is given up chiefly to preparation for clinical work, while the third year is devoted to the fundamental principles or essentials of all the different branches of clinical work. Each department furnishes a general view of the subject which it teaches, and by means of section work gives the students some little practical experience in the handling of patients. The result of these changes is a very busy third year, with many examinations at the end of it. The plan for the third year went into effect this year for the first time, and seems to have worked well.

3. The third change, making the fourth year entirely elective, was adopted at the same time that all the required instruction was put into the first three years; but the details of the elective courses were not worked out until this last year. They will go into effect this coming year.

When the different departments were requested to submit electives for the fourth year, a great many courses were offered, but they were formed on no common system. They varied in length from four to one thousand hours, and were to be given at all times of the day and year. The committees were, therefore, forced to adopt a simple scheme in regard to the length of the courses and the time when they could be given, and select from the courses offered those which by combination or other changes could be adapted to this scheme. The result is as follows:—

FOURTH-YEAR ELECTIVES.

The electives of the fourth year are given as half-courses. A half-course occupies the entire day for one month (the all-day plan) or the forenoons or the afternoons for two months (the half-day plan). Each half-course has a value of 125 hours. Eight half-courses are necessary to satisfy the requirement of one thousand hours of work demanded in the fourth year. The two half-courses elected for the first two or the last two months of each half-year must be formed on the same plan to avoid conflict.

Medicine, pediatrics, surgery, and obstetrics offer electives on the all-day plan.

Anatomy, histology, embryology, neuropathology, clinical surgical pathology, genito-urinary surgery, orthopedics, surgical pathology, gynæcology, dermatology, neurology, ophthalmology, otology, and laryngology offer electives on the half-day plan.

Physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, pathology, and hygiene offer electives on both plans.

The several half-courses offered by any one department are not necessarily graded courses, but represent hours of clinical, technical, and research work.

Students who intend to become general practitioners are advised to elect the following group of subjects:—

Medicine	3 half-courses.
Pediatrics	1 " "
Surgery	1 " "
Obstetrics	1 " "
Neurology and psychiatry, dermatology and syphilis, or gynæcology	1 " "
Anatomy, histology, embryology, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, neuropathology, orthopedics, or hygiene	1 " "

Students interested in surgery are advised to elect the following group of subjects:—

Medicine	2 half-courses.
Surgery	2 " "
Genito-urinary surgery	1 " "
Anatomy	1 " "
Gynæcology or clinical surgical pathology	1 " "
Orthopedics or surgical pathology	1 " "

Students wishing to specialize in any particular branch of medical study may elect more than one of the half-courses offered in a given subject, but no student will be allowed to devote his whole year to one subject without the consent of the head of the department concerned. Special arrangements will be made for students desirous of paying exclusive attention to other subjects than those listed,—for example, pharmacology and comparative pathology.

When a student's research work in an elective is necessarily prolonged beyond the time elected for that subject, he will be allowed, with the permission of the Board of Administration, to make such changes in his electives as will enable him to finish his research work, provided the time required does not extend beyond the school year.

The final choice of electives must be left at the Dean's office on or before the day of registration.

The Faculty reserves the right to modify the selection of the courses chosen by any student.

The nature of the examinations shall be determined by each department subject to the approval of the Faculty. The student's credit may be based on his daily written record of work, and on a practical or written examination at the end of his course or upon all combined. The mark assigned must be sent immediately to the Dean's office.

GENERAL PLAN OF INSTRUCTION.

ANATOMY. Half-courses, afternoons, throughout year.

Anatomy I. October and November, December and January, February and March.

During the first half-year the number will be limited to six students in each half-course. This is a dissecting course, in which the three parts of the body are to be dissected. It will be under the direction of the demonstrator. Each student will be quizzed once a week, and there will be a certain amount of supervision by the assistants.

N.B.—No one can take this course who has not passed his first-year anatomy.

Anatomy II. April and May. This is not to be considered a course for professional anatomists, but one suited to the practitioner. It will consist of topographical anatomy, the study of frozen sections, and of special parts of anatomy. In the selection of the latter every effort will be made to meet the wishes of those taking the course. For instance, some can give particular attention to the joints, others to the circulation, etc. Though there will be no systematic dissection, the cadaver will be used for study and for special dissections. This elective will be under the immediate supervision of the professor of anatomy.

HISTOLOGY AND EMBRYOLOGY. Half-courses, afternoons, second half-year.

(1) Embryology I. February and March. Elementary laboratory course, especially correlated with anatomy and pathology.

(2) Embryology II. April and May. Proresearch work. Each student will be given a special piece of work to verify and extend some important recent investigation.

(3) Histology. April and May. General laboratory course offering training in methods. Each student must select in advance one of the three following forms of this course:—

(a) General Histology, intended specially as preparation for advanced work in anatomy and pathology.

(b) General structure and development of the nervous system.

(c) General structure and development of the urogenital system.

PHYSIOLOGY. Half-courses, forenoons, afternoons, or all day, throughout year.

Students may elect work in any field of physiology. It is to be presumed that such students desire additional work in physiology to fit them for some special field of medicine,—for example, the diseases of the nervous system; or they may wish to pursue physiology, pathology, or some other biological science as a profession. They will be received into the research laboratories of the department, and will carry on their studies side by side with the members of the staff. The work will consist of fundamental experiments, the study of accessory data, and the reading of selected original investigations. The student will be guided by personal conference with the professor in charge, and, if desirable, by informal lectures.

PHYSIOLOGICAL AND PATHOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year; all day or afternoons, first half-year.

A student may elect work along the general lines of the first-year course, or he may undertake research work on some special subject, provided he is sufficiently trained in inorganic and organic chemistry.

Opportunity will also be afforded men interested in toxicology and medico-legal chemistry to pursue work in these fields.

114 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

BACTERIOLOGY. Half-courses, forenoons, afternoons, or all day, second half-year.

One month electives will be of two kinds, including: A, Instruction in methods of diagnosis depending upon bacteriological procedures; and, B, Instruction in methods of bacteriological diagnosis in use in Health Board laboratories, including the examination of waters and soils.

Longer courses may include one or the other of these, together with a limited piece of research work.

PATHOLOGY.

(1) Pathology. Half-courses, forenoons or all day, second half-year. The work for students electing but one month will in general consist of training in post-mortem technique and in the description of the various anatomical lesions found at the autopsies, supplemented with practice in bacteriology and surgical pathology afforded by a hospital laboratory. In addition each student will be required to study carefully at least one of the cases which come to autopsy, and write a report of it embodying the clinical history and the literature bearing on the case.

Students who elect more than one month in pathology will be required to study thoroughly and report several cases, and also undertake a limited piece of research work.

(2) Neuropathology. Half-courses, afternoons, first half-year. Each student will (a) be trained in the chief methods of neuropathological technique, and (b) receive the tissues and protocol of a case, upon which he will return a report and summary, involving library work. There will be a few lectures on the general subject. Competent students may undertake experimental problems.

HYGIENE. Half-courses, forenoons, afternoons, or all day, throughout year.

The instruction will be suited to the qualifications of the individual student. It will consist in part of laboratory instruction and in part of special research. The regular course of laboratory instruction will comprise the analysis of air, soils, water, and foods, and the investigation of disinfectants, etc.

MEDICINE.—I. Clinical Medicine. Half-courses, all day, throughout year.

The morning will be devoted to clinical work in various out-patient departments and hospital wards, the afternoon to lectures on special subjects. There will be required also a report of a single case which shall serve as the subject of a clinical conference, and a thesis containing original work of some character, the length of which will vary according to the number of half-courses elected. Eight such courses are offered, and the student may elect as many as he chooses.

(1) Clinical Instruction. This will be of two kinds:—

(a) Work as assistant in the out-patient department or hospital wards.

(b) Attendance on special courses of advanced clinical medicine to be given simultaneously at each hospital, three days a week, between nine and ten, by instructors or assistants in medicine.

(2) Didactic Teaching. This will be given in the afternoon on special topics in medicine. These lectures will supplement to a considerable extent the specialized work given in the mornings between nine and ten. Other exercises will be devoted to case teaching, to demonstrations in gross pathology, given jointly by members of the pathological and medical departments, and to practical therapeutics.

(3) Original Thesis. Each student shall present before graduation an original thesis, which will embody clinical, laboratory, statistical, or literary work. The subject of the thesis shall be approved, and the work done under the supervision of some member of the medical department selected by the student. The thesis shall be presented at a meeting of the class presided over by one of the younger members of the department selected by the professors. The member of the department under whose supervision the thesis of the afternoon has been prepared shall also be present.

(4) Clinical Conference. Each student will report and discuss one case at a meeting of the class, as heretofore.

II. Theory and Practice. The electives in medicine offered by the department of Theory and Practice consist of half-courses involving attendance at the Massachusetts General Hospital throughout the day for one month from October to May, inclusive. It will be limited to classes of four students, but may be repeated, when possible.

PEDIATRICS. Half-courses, all day, throughout year.

The work will consist of clinical instruction of cases in the wards and out-patient departments of the Infants' Hospital, Children's Hospital, and the Contagious Wards of the South Department. Students will be assigned to the various wards and out-patient departments by the Professor of Pediatrics, and will work under his supervision, and in so far as is practicable the work will be assigned in reference to their individual needs and wishes. The students may also attend the clinical lectures given by Dr. Rotch in the third year. The direction of the clinical work will be carried out by the other members of the department. The work in detail cannot be described until the number of students electing Pediatrics is known.

CLINICAL SURGICAL PATHOLOGY. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year.

The course will consist of a study of clinical cases with especial reference to the pathology of the lesions present and the use of the microscope in immediate diagnosis. The work will be supplemented with conferences and demonstrations in the Warren Museum.

SURGERY:—

(1) Surgery. Half-courses, all day, throughout year.

The instruction will consist of ward work, the examination of cases, the recording of histories, the establishing of diagnoses, the etherization of patients, the dressing of injuries, wounds, and fractures, the close observation of operations, seeing the progress of a surgical patient, and the end results of cases. The out-patient work will consist of the establishing of diagnoses, the treatment of cases under direction, and the recording of histories. This work will be carried out at the hospitals, in the wards and out-patient departments, and will occupy a part of each day, and will be from time to time directed and supervised by instructors.

The afternoons will be devoted to library, museum, and literary work, surgical pathology, case teaching, regional surgery, and operative surgery. Seminars and conferences will be held as occasion requires. The student will be required to account for his daily work.

Any student who wishes information or advice regarding his course in surgery in the fourth year may apply to Dr. H. L. Burrell, 22 Newbury Street, on any day except Saturday or Sunday, between 2 and 3 P.M.

(2) Genito-urinary Surgery. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year.

The instruction will consist of ward and out-patient work, the taking of histories, the witnessing of and assisting at operations, the reporting of the progress of cases, and seeing the end results. Conferences with the student will be held from time to time.

(3) Orthopedic Surgery. Half-courses, afternoons, throughout year.

The instruction will consist of ward and out-patient work, the taking of histories, the witnessing of and assisting at operations, the reporting of the progress of cases, and seeing the end results. Conferences with the student will be held from time to time.

(4) Surgical Pathology. Half-courses, afternoons, throughout year.

Students will be received in the surgical laboratory for the investigation of special subjects in the pathology of surgical diseases. The choice of subjects to be investigated may be made by the students, or the director of the laboratory will suggest the lines of investigation to be pursued. A considerable amount of fresh pathological material from surgical operations is received, and will be demonstrated to students who elect the course. The amount of material is sufficiently large to provide for numerous lines of investigation.

OBSTETRICS AND GYNÆCOLOGY:—

(1) Obstetrics. Half-courses, all day, throughout year.

The course will be given at the Boston Lying-in Hospital and at the Medical School. During the first half of the course the student will lodge at the Hospital, and devote his time chiefly to attendance on cases in the out-patient clinic. He will also be called upon to assist at operations, and, when his other duties permit, to make ward visits with the physician on duty. In the second half of the course he will conduct the convalescence of the cases delivered by him during his resident service, write full reports of his cases, and make daily ward visits, receiving clinical instruction on house patients, and witnessing operations. In his clinical work he will have the supervision and instruction of the Department and of the Hospital Staff on duty. In the second half of his course he will also be given, at the Medical School, a course of demonstrations in operative obstetrics, and each student will practise the various operations on the manikin.

(2) Gynæcology. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year.

The course will be given in the wards and out-patient department of the Gynæcological Service at the Boston City Hospital, which affords ample material for a comprehensive study of gynæcology, from the simpler lesions requiring only minor local treatment or the various plastic operations to the major cases treated by capital operation. Students will be given opportunity to educate the touch, and will be instructed in diagnosis and in the methods of minor treatment. The various operations, major and minor, will be demonstrated, and opportunity given to study convalescence and post-operative treatment. Students will also be expected to study, and report on, pathological specimens removed by operation.

Cases will be assigned for history-taking, examination, diagnosis, with notes on operation and subsequent treatment. Reports of such cases will be presented at clinical conferences, for discussion by the instructors and by the class. As far as possible, students will be expected to assist in clinical work.

DERMATOLOGY AND SYPHILIS. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year.

Instruction in clinical dermatology will be given at the Massachusetts General Hospital, both in the out-patient department and in the ward for skin diseases. Instruction will also be given in the histology and pathology of the skin, with training in the preparation of microscopical preparations and in histological technique.

NEUROLOGY AND PSYCHIATRY. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year.

The instruction will be as follows:—

(1) Recording histories and making examinations of patients presenting themselves at the out-patient department of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

(2) Assisting in the treatment of such patients by electricity and otherwise.

(3) Reading specified articles with reference to subjects coming up for investigation.

(4) Making original investigations with regard to certain clinical points.

118 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

For this purpose the patients presenting themselves at the out-patient department can be studied, and, to a limited degree, the patients in the medical and surgical wards of the hospital.

OPHTHALMOLOGY. Half-courses, forenoons, second half-year.

The work will consist of personal instruction in the use of the ophthalmoscope and other instruments of precision. An opportunity will be given to work in the out-patient department of the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary and to observe and study cases in the wards. In addition there will be instruction in ophthalmic operations with opportunity to witness their exemplification in the operative work of the hospital.

OTOLOGY. Half-courses, forenoons, throughout year.

For men who elect but one half-course the work will consist chiefly of clinical training and instruction, hearing tests, and objective examinations and manipulations in the out-patient, house, and operating services of the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

For men especially interested in Otology, who wish to devote all their time to the subject, a thorough course of instruction has been planned, embracing the anatomy, physiology, and pathology of the ear, nose, and nasopharynx in addition to thorough clinical instruction.

LARYNGOLOGY. Half-courses, forenoons, first half-year.

The course is held on alternate days at the Boston City and Massachusetts General Hospitals. Systematic clinical instruction is provided from the abundant material of the out-patient departments, supplemented by demonstrations with the aid of diagrams and anatomical preparations. There are also practical exercises in the use of instruments and apparatus.

A study of this scheme will show that each department in the school offers only one elective, but that elective is given in sections, so that as small a number of men as possible will be in attendance at any one time. For example, if thirty-two men elect obstetrics, but four will be on duty at the hospital during any one month in the year. Such a plan is, of course, most desirable in clinical courses, and it has the additional advantage that it enables the student to obtain individual instruction.

It seems probable that these electives will become the basis of the graduate courses offered by the school, and, if the same plan is extended to the summer months, they would form the best kind of courses for the summer school.

Although the students are not required to decide on their choice of electives until the day of registration at the opening of the school in the fall, they were asked to hand in their probable choice by the first of May, in order that the different departments might obtain an idea of the number of men they would have to prepare for. An analysis of the selection made by a class of sixty-eight men is interesting.

The specialties are, for the most part, neglected: the great majority of students prefer more training in the fundamental clinical subjects.

PROFESSOR EDWARD S. WOOD.

Edward Stickney Wood, Professor of Chemistry in the Harvard Medical School, and a member of the Faculty since 1876, died at his summer home in Pocasset on July 11, 1905, aged fifty-nine years. During the winter of 1904-05 he was not in his usual vigorous health, and examination revealed the presence of an abdominal tumor. In March, 1905, an exploratory operation by Dr. Maurice H. Richardson disclosed a carcinoma of the cæcum whose extent forbade an attempt at radical removal. Professor Wood recovered rapidly from the operation, and the X-rays were faithfully tried as a therapeutic measure, but without success in retarding the fatal progress of the disease.

Professor Wood came of old New England stock, whose first representative settled in Massachusetts in 1638. His father, Alfred Wood, was the head of a grocery firm in Cambridge, Mass. Edward Stickney Wood was the second son of Alfred Wood and Laura Stickney Wood, and was born in Cambridge, April 28, 1846. His boyhood was uneventful. His education was obtained in the public schools, and he entered Harvard College with the class of 1867. Here he gave evidence of his tastes by his devotion to mathematics and chemistry, in which he attained high rank. He was both liked and respected among his classmates, and was a prominent member of the Pi Eta Society and other organizations. He was devoted to outdoor life and sports, but was not especially identified with any branch of collegiate athletics.

After graduation in 1867 Wood entered the Harvard Medical School, and completed the course in 1870, although he did not receive the degree of M.D. until one year later. He served as house officer in the Marine Hospital in Chelsea, and later as surgical house pupil in the Massachusetts General Hospital, where his colleagues were Dr. James R. Chadwick, Dr. James T. Boutelle, and the late Dr. J. P. Oliver. Although his course so far was in anticipation of the practice of surgery, he seized an opportunity which presented to devote himself to his old favorite study of chemistry. He went abroad to prepare himself more fully in this branch, and returned in 1872 to become Assistant Professor of Chemistry. Four years later he succeeded Dr. James C. White in the full professorship of Chemistry, and held that chair until his death.

Professor Wood married in 1872 Miss Irene E. Hills, by whom he had one child, a daughter. Some years after the death of his first wife he married Miss Elizabeth Richardson, who survives him. His daughter married Dr. Frederick M. Briggs, Professor of Surgery in Tufts Medical School.

His public career is thus summed up in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal for July 27, 1905:—

“Dr. Wood occupied two quite distinct positions in the public eye: that of professor in the Medical School and member of the Faculty, and that of expert medical witness in the courts of this and other Commonwealths. As a teacher, his success was undoubted. He had the rare faculty of making a subject, dry by comparison with others, such as surgery, which is capable of more brilliant demonstration, attractive by his method of teaching, resembling in this respect his warm personal friend, the late Oliver Wendell Holmes. He won not only the respect of his students, but also their affection; and none will regret his death more than those who have had the rare privilege of having received his instruction. He was most just to all his pupils; and, while he insisted on every man's having a sufficient knowledge of the subject before he could receive his degree, he at the same time exercised a wise and beneficent judgment of the work of each individual man, and he must have been a dull person indeed who, after listening to Professor Wood's instruction, was unable to meet the requirement of the examination paper. His success as a teacher, as well as an expert, was in large measure due to a characteristic manifest even in his earliest years as a student himself. It would probably be extravagant to say that Dr. Wood was a genius, but he had that which counts for more than genius in the long run,—a tremendous capacity for work and an infinite power of application, an unremitting insistence on taking pains. He never attacked a subject which he did not master thoroughly. What he knew he knew. This same thing he endeavored to instil into the minds of his pupils; and there are many now who have achieved success in their profession because of having followed his example. As a member of the Faculty, he was invaluable, and the President of the University held him in the highest regard, and relied largely on his advice. He always had the warmest interest in the welfare of the school, and was a valuable friend and adviser to its dean. Enthusiastic, but still conservative, his counsel will be sadly missed in the future.

“As a medical expert in his own especial line, he was facile princeps. In the history of forensic medicine of New England there has probably been no man who was his equal. Almost from the start he compelled the respect and admiration of both bench and bar. Even the accused and their counsel had to admit that, however damaging to their cause his evidence was, he had ‘set down naught in malice.’ His absolute impartiality, his clearness of statement, his wonderful ability to make, as far as possible, intelligible even to the mind of the layman on the jury matters of science, his unruffled good-nature under severe cross-examination, and his unquestioned tenacity of his propositum won him universal regard, and the popular judgment of his forensic work was expressed in the highest terms. His experience in this line was very great. There has been hardly a case of trial for a capital crime where his knowledge of chemistry, and especially his skill in the demonstration of blood stains of various kinds, in which his services had not been required. To recount his cases would be almost like reciting the ‘catalogue of ships’; and the last case of importance in this State was one where his evidence was of the utmost importance, and was given under conditions of much physical suffering. In the handling of these important cases his discretion was admirable. He considered that his whole duty was to the Commonwealth and its officers, and always declined to give out any information to the garnerers of the press, inasmuch as such communication would not only 'corrupt good manners,' but might imperil the case of the government. He was discretion itself. In short, his success as a medical jurist was something phenomenal.

"It might be thought that in the midst of such continuous work Professor Wood would have little or no time for aught else. Such was not the case. His industry was untiring. Not only did he find time for fugitive papers for medical journals, addresses to medical bodies, and participations in the discussions of various societies, but also for more important and enduring work, now held for the future by the 'art preservative.' He translated the work of Neubauer and Vogel on Urinary Analysis, and, with Dr. Robert Amory, revised that portion of the work of Wharton and Stillé on Medical Jurisprudence so far as his special line was concerned. In public work he also shared the tasks of others. In 1874 he was a member of the commission which investigated the sanitary condition of the waters of the Sudbury, Shawsheen, Mystic, and Charles Rivers. He also prepared an important paper in 1894 for the State Board of Health relative to arsenic in its relation to domestic life. He was a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, member of the American Public Health Association, American Pharmaceutical Association, Massachusetts Medico-legal Society, Boston Society for Medical Improvement, and Massachusetts Medical Society. He was also a member of the committee for the revision of the Pharmacopœia in 1880, and chemist to the Massachusetts General Hospital."

Great as is the loss to the community by the death of Professor Wood, the personal loss to his friends is infinitely greater. Warm-hearted, kind, and loyal, he attracted to his friendship all who came in contact with him. His democratic instincts led him not to confine his friendships to any one class or group of men. His generosity and courageous optimism were constant sources of both material and spiritual support for those in misfortune or affliction. For those who enjoyed the privilege of his intimate companionship his place will not be filled.

A HISTORY OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL.

There is soon to appear from the press of the Lewis Publishing Company a work which will be received with the greatest interest by all graduates of the Medical School and by all students and educators in the field of medicine. The History of the Harvard Medical School, prepared by Dr. Thomas F. Harrington, M.D., 1888, with the editorial collaboration of Dr. James G. Mumford, M.D., 1890, will be unique as the report of a department of an American university. It will comprise three volumes of over six hundred pages each, appropriately illustrated with reproductions especially prepared for this work. The Medical School was established in 1782, but, in order to get at every available fact bearing on the subject, Dr. Harrington has read through and commented on the minutes of every meeting which the Corporation, Overseers, and Medical Faculty have held since 1638. The labor and time involved in such a work is immense. Probably no other person, with the possible exception of President Eliot, has done this.

For the first century of its existence the Medical School was a pioneer in its field, and its history has been an epitome of the various steps in medical education in this country. From the records which he has searched, as well as from many hitherto unpublished documents, Dr. Harrington has succeeded in gathering much new information on this subject. One of the most valuable features of the work is a list of more than three hundred graduates of the college proper who practised medicine prior to the establishment of the Medical School, and a detailed catalogue of all graduates of the school from 1788-1905, inclusive, together with data concerning their careers. Unfortunately, the author has had the inevitable disappointment in the nature and number of letters from alumni who should have sent him information, so that doubtless many facts of personal interest have been omitted.

The thanks of Dr. Harrington's and Dr. Mumford's fellow-alumni are due them for the energy and devotion to the interests of the school which has brought to successful completion so valuable and laborious a work.

NOTES.

Harvard graduates from all over the country attended the recent meeting of the American Medical Association at Portland, Ore. Many made the occasion an opportunity to make a sight-seeing tour of the North-west. A party, including Drs. J. Collins Warren, Frederick C. Shattuck, Maurice H. Richardson, John C. Munro, Thomas Dwight, Richard F. O'Neil, and John Warren, with ladies, left Boston June 26 in a private car, and returned the last of July. The party reached San Francisco on July 5, and attended the meetings of the American Surgical Association, before which body papers were read by Drs. Warren and Richardson. On the evening of July 5 the Harvard Club of San Francisco gave a dinner of seventy covers, to which a few distinguished guests, not graduates of Harvard, were invited. The president, Dr. T. W. Huntington, M.D., 1876, presided; and among those who spoke were Drs. Dwight, Warren, Shattuck, and Richardson of Boston, Dr. Roswell Park of Buffalo, and Dr. W. J. Mayo of Wochester, Minn. On July 8 the Boston car started north over the Shasta route for Portland, where the meeting of the American Medical Association was attended on July 11-14. From there the party visited Seattle, the Canadian North-west, various points of interest on the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and returned via St. Paul and the Great Lakes.

PERSONALS.

CALIFORNIA.

LOS ANGELES.

Dr. Charles Crosby Williams (1886) is pleasantly situated at 401 South Hope Street, Los Angeles.

Dr. James T. Fisher (1896), formerly of Boston, has been appointed Professor of Nervous Diseases at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Los Angeles.

OAKLAND.

Dr. John J. Meigs (1860) announces his removal to 1056 Jackson Street.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The July dinner of the Harvard Club of San Francisco was held during the meeting of the American Surgical Association, and a dinner was given by the club, to which all the Harvard medical men of the coast were asked, as well as the Harvard men who were visitors. Dr. Maurice Richardson, Dr. J. C. Warren, Dr. T. Dwight, and Dr. F. C. Shattuck represented the Faculty of the Medical School, and, in what they had to say after dinner, brought us into close touch with the recent movement in medicine in Boston. Dr. Foss, of Phoenix, Ariz., and Dr. George Whiteside, of Portland, Ore., our former and very able secretary, were present at the dinner, each of them coming nearly one thousand miles to attend. Dr. H. C. Moffitt, of San Francisco, was elected chairman of the section on practice of medicine of the A. M. A. at the meeting in Portland, Ore. Dr. Moffitt will preside at the meeting in Boston next year.

ILLINOIS.

CHICAGO.

Dr. William Wenzlick (1888) has removed to 247 Winthrop Avenue.

The following appointments were recently made in Rush Medical College: Dr. Henry F. Lewis (1888), assistant professor of obstetrics and gynæcology; Dr. F. S. Churchill (1890), assistant professor of pediatrics; and Dr. J. A. Capps (1895), assistant professor of medicine.

Dr. C. O. Young (1893) was recently made surgeon to the Washington Park Hospital.

Dr. C. L. Mix (1895) has been elected secretary of North-western Medical School.

Dr. E. L. Ryerson (1897) is on the surgical staff of St. Luke's Hospital.

INDIANA.

Entrance examinations for Harvard University were held at Howe School, Lima, and at Indianapolis, on June 26 through July 1, 1905. An alumnus acted as officer in the latter city.

Members of the Association were on duty at the Field and Emergency Hospitals during the recent Turner Bund convention.

Dr. E. F. Hodges (1877) and Mrs. Hodges have returned from an extended tour of the Great Lakes, Canada, and New England.

Dr. Charles Helm (1887), who has practised for many years in Peru, has joined the Association.

Dr. H. E. Woodbury (1899) and Mrs. Woodbury returned from Europe and spent a week in Indianapolis before going to their home in Natick, Mass.

Dr. Fletcher Hodges (1902) announces the birth of a daughter, July 25, 1905.

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE.

The ninth annual meeting of the Associated Harvard Clubs was held at Louisville, May 26 and 27, 1905.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE.

Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs (1887) has returned from a short trip abroad. The sixth annual meeting of the American Roentgen Ray Society will be held at Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, September 28, 29, and 30.

MASSACHUSETTS.

ANDOVER.

Dr. Charles E. Abbott (1881) is local medical examiner for the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

Dr. John A. Leitch (1887) is an Andover examiner for the New York Life Insurance Co.

BOSTON.

Dr. H. P. Bowditch (1868) has recently returned much invigorated in health from a three months' trip to California.

Professor William James, M.D. (1869), has accepted the acting professorship of philosophy at Leland Stanford University for the second semester of next year, beginning in January, 1906.

Dr. John W. Farlow (1877) is spending his vacation in Europe.

Dr. Harold C. Ernst (1880) sailed for Europe April 28, to be gone until the last of September. The trip is taken partly for health and partly for recreation. He will travel through the château region of France, and then visit Naples and Jena, returning by way of England.

Dr. E. B. Lane (1885) has resigned his position as superintendent of the Boston Insane Hospital, and Dr. William Noyes (1885) has been appointed in his place.

Dr. Richard C. Cabot (1892) delivered an address at the San Francisco County Medical Society, meeting on July 18, on "Two Causes of Emaciation not Generally Recognized."

Dr. Francis D. Donoghue (1894) and Mrs. Donoghue have returned from a trip to the Pacific coast. Dr. Donoghue was one of those chosen to read a paper at the recent convention of the American Medical Association.

Dr. James T. Fisher (1896) has been appointed professor of nervous diseases at the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Los Angeles, Cal.

Dr. Maynard Ladd (1898) and Mrs. Ladd, who was Miss Anna Coleman Watts of Philadelphia, have arrived home from Europe. Their wedding a few months ago was solemnized in Salisbury cathedral, England, the Dean performing the ceremony. Dr. and Mrs. Ladd have gone down to Manchester-by-the-Sea for the rest of the summer.

Dr. W. B. Odiorne (1899) is spending the summer in Europe.

Dr. Fred T. Murphy (1901) announces the birth of a son, Charles, June 19, 1905.

Dr. Ernest E. Tyzzer (1902) has been appointed director of the commission working under the bequest of Caroline Brewer Croft for the study of cancer, in place of Dr. E. H. Nichols (1892), who recently resigned.

Dr. Samuel Robinson (1902) and Miss Ellen Derby Bellows were married April 29, 1905.

Dr. Francis H. Lahey (1904) has been appointed a surgical interne in the Boston City Hospital.

Dr. G. C. Shattuck (1905) has been appointed a medical interne in the Massachusetts General Hospital.

BROOKLINE.

Dr. George H. Francis (1887) was in March chosen one of the water commissioners of the town of Brookline after a lively contest.

LAWRENCE.

Dr. Charles G. Carleton (1867) is occupying quarters in the New Bay State Building. Dr. Carleton's office was for many years in the old building which has stood so long upon the site upon which the new building was erected.

Dr. John G. Crawford (1867) has removed his office and residence to 90 Summer Street.

Dr. Octavius T. Howe (1877) is occupying his summer home at Bass Rocks for the summer.

Dr. Frank B. Flanders (1878) is one of the local medical examiners for the Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Dr. George W. Dowe (1881) has been appointed on the Board of Examining Surgeons for the Bureau of Pensions at Lawrence.

Dr. Frederick W. Kennedy (1883) is a member of the Executive Committee of the Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health.

Dr. Herbert W. Manahan (1894) is a medical examiner for the Equitable Life Assurance Society for this city.

Dr. George B. Sargent (1894) was elected councillor at the last annual meeting of the Essex North District Society, M. M. S. S.

Dr. John T. Cahill (1896) is a member of the American Academy of Medicine.

Dr. Edwin B. Forbes (1897), of Detroit, Mich., has been spending his vacation in Lawrence.

134 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

Dr. Timothy J. Daly (1897) has removed his office and residence to 347 Haverhill Street.

Dr. Joseph A. Hogan (1897) is now occupying the suite of offices formerly used by Dr. Daly.

Dr. Victor A. Reed (1897) is a member of the Massachusetts Association of Boards of Health.

Dr. Joseph A. Dorgan (1898) is specializing in ophthalmology, otology, and laryngology.

Dr. Frederick D. McAllister (1898) has recently been appointed a local medical examiner for the Mutual Life Insurance Company.

Dr. Gustave E. Kurth (1901) has just purchased the Adams estate at 86 East Haverhill Street, and has taken up his residence and office there.

Dr. J. Forrest Burnham (1901) has been appointed a local medical examiner for the Manhattan Life Insurance Company.

Dr. Albert W. Hancock (1904) has entered on his senior service as house officer at the Lawrence General Hospital.

MALDEN.

Dr. H. S. Johnson (1883) is a trustee of the Malden Public Library.

WORCESTER.

An appeal to the public has been issued in behalf of the Memorial Hospital, asking for $100,000 to be used in the erection and endowment of a children's ward. It is understood that a little more than $30,000 has been secured. The appeal is signed by Leonard Wheeler, M.D. (1870), president of the board of trustees.

Dr. W. T. Clark (1890) has been reappointed assistant medical examiner of the Worcester District by Governor Douglas.

Dr. Kendall Emerson (1901) had a son born Oct. 13, 1904.

Dr. Walter C. Seelye (1899) had a son born April 27, 1905.

Dr. W. H. Rose (1900) has removed his office to 9 Elm Street.

Dr. F. H. Cary (1900) has removed his office to 11 Elm Street.

Dr. Philip H. Cook (1903) has opened an office at 2 Wellington Street, with Dr. E. L. Hunt (1902).

Dr. Frank W. George (1902), who has been practising at Princeton, Mass., during the winter, has removed to New Jersey.

MANCHESTER.

At the last annual meeting of the New Hampshire Medical Society, held in May, a paper entitled "Orthopedic Operations and the Treatment of Flatfoot" was read by Dr. George C. Wilkins (1899). A paper entitled "Dysmenorrhœa as Associated with Ante flexion of the Uterus" was read by Dr. D. W. Parker (1903).

Dr. J. Franklin Robinson (1886) was married July 19, 1905, to Miss Grace A. Hosmer, of Manchester.

At the June meeting of the Manchester Medical Association Dr. A. Gale Straw (1890) was elected president, Dr. H. D. W. Carvelle (1878) vice-president, and Dr. George C. Wilkins (1899) secretary and treasurer.

Dr. A. Gale Straw (1890) has removed his office to 1037 Elm Street.

At the last meeting of the New Hampshire Medical Society a resolution was passed which provides for expulsion from the society after Jan. 1, 1905, of any member doing contract work for lodges, clubs, and societies for a less rate than the regular rates in the locality where the physician lives. We believe this is a step in the right direction, and should be followed by other States where the evils of contract medicine obtains.

NASHUA.

Dr. William E. Reed (1901) has been recently operated on for appendicitis, making a good recovery.

KEENE.

The Harvard Club of Keene held a smoker May 5, with fourteen members present.

NEW JERSEY.

JERSEY CITY.

Dr. Edwin Leonard, Jr. (1898), is president of the Reed & Carnick Company, residence 42 Germania Avenue.

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY.

J. Bergen Ogden (1893) removed from Boston to New York City on July 1, 1905, to accept the position of medical chemist to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. Address, No. 1 Madison Avenue, New York City.

OHIO.

CLEVELAND.

Dr. Charles Frank Hoover (1892) sailed for Germany July 12, to spend a year in study.

The engagement is announced of Dr. George Wilton Moorehouse (1897) to Miss Kathryn Miles, of Sharon, Pa.

Dr. Charles Edwin Briggs (1897) sailed July 8 for Germany, where he will be for three months.

OREGON.

PORTLAND.

Dr. George S. Whiteside (1897) has recently been appointed assistant to the chair of Genito-urinary Surgery and Diseases of the Skin, in the Medical Department of the University of Oregon, Portland.

Dr. Whiteside attended the meetings of the American Surgical Association as the guest of Dr. T. W. Huntington, M.D., 1876, in San Francisco, and returned to Portland to take part in the sessions of the American Urological Association, of which he was elected a vice-president.

The fourth annual meeting of the American Urological Association was held at Portland, Ore., July 12 and 13, 1905. Papers were read by the following Harvard medical men:—

Dr. W. P. Manton (1881), of Detroit, "Nephroptosis and Chronic Appendicitis"; Dr. F. M. Johnson (1883), of Boston, "Lavage of the Renal Pelvis in the Treatment of Lithæmia, Pyelitis, and Certain Forms of Nephritis, with Notes of Illustrative Cases"; Dr. Follen Cabot, Jr. (1894), of New York, "Prostatectomy by the Two-stage Method" and "A New Cautery for Use in Connection with my Cystoscope"; Dr. George S. Whiteside (1897), of Portland, "Some Untoward Results of Prostatectomy."

RHODE ISLAND.

PROVIDENCE.

Dr. H. G. Miller (1865) has presented his entire professional library to the Rhode Island Medical Society.

At recent meetings of the Providence Medical Association papers were presented by Dr. G. T. Swarts (1879), "The Relation of the State to Diphtheria," and Dr. F. E. Peckham (1890), "Rheumatoid Disease as seen in Providence."

Dr. H. P. Lovewell (1894) has been appointed physician to out-patients, Rhode Island Hospital.

Dr. John S. Waterman (1901) has opened an office at 274 Benefit Street.

Dr. W. G. Dwinell (1901) has opened an office at 274 Benefit Street.

Dr. J. B. Ferguson (1902) has resigned his position as assistant superintendent at the Rhode Island Hospital, and has opened an office at 274 Broad Street.

Dr. Roland Hammond (1902) has opened an office at 241 Washington Street. At a recent meeting of the Rhode Island Hospital Club Dr. Hammond presented a paper on "Pernicious Anæmia."

Dr. Frank J. Jones (1902) has opened an office at 29 Douglas Avenue.

Dr. William Hindle (1903) has opened an office at 160 Broad Street.

Dr. G. T. Spicer (1903), Dr. E. L. Barron (1903), Dr. J. P. Lewis (1904), Dr. W. C. Woodward (1904), and Dr. W. T. Wooley (1904) are at present serving as house officers at the Rhode Island Hospital.

The first annual field day of the Rhode Island Hospital Club was held in Westerly, R.I., where about forty old house officers were the guests of the president, Dr. John Champlin, University of New York, 1886. Barges and "Bubbles" met the boys at the Westerly station, and conveyed them to Watch Hill, where all kinds of seaside harmless amusements were enjoyed for about an hour. Another drive of five miles brought us to Brightman's Pond, where a real Rhode Island clam-bake was followed by a ball game long to be remembered. An accurate record of the score would be as impossible as a clear account of the details of the game. Your correspondent THINKS that one of the nines was made up of the following: Dr. W. R. White, '77, Dr. H. Terry, '80, Dr. J. M. Peters, '87, Dr. J. Perkins, '91, Dr. C. H. Griffin, '98, Dr. D. Churchill, '98, Dr. G. A. Matteson, '00, Dr. C. E. Hawkes, '01, Dr. A. A. Barrows, '92, and Dr. G. S. Hathaway, '02.

UNITED STATES ARMY.

Assistant Surgeon Henry A. Webber (1896) has been relieved from duty at Fort Walla Walla, Wash., and ordered to Fort Banks, Mass., for duty.

UNITED STATES NAVY.

Surgeon Frank L. Pleadwell (1896) is stationed at the United States Naval Hospital, Yokohama, Japan.

OBITUARY.

1848. Dr. Edward Newhall died at his home in Lynn, June 12, 1905, from senile debility, after an invalidism of nine weeks, aged eighty-two. He was a graduate of Harvard Medical School, a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, and for many years consulting physician to the Lynn Hospital.

1861. Dr. Jarvis King Mason, medical examiner for the town of Suffield, Conn., for twenty-two years, and once president of the Hartford County Medical Association, a member of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association and of the American Academy of Medicine, died at his home in Suffield, April 8, from cerebral hemorrhage. He was born at Enfield, Conn., Nov. 8, 1831. He was married three times.

1861. Dr. Robert E. Jameson died suddenly, Aug. 4, 1905, at his home, 28 Eliot Street, Jamaica Plain. He was born in Lynn, Sept. 18, 1837. He was at the Harvard Medical School when the Civil War broke out. Leaving his studies, he enlisted in the Eleventh Massachusetts Volunteers as hospital steward, and later served in the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts Volunteers as assistant surgeon and afterwards as surgeon. In 1864 he came North on a furlough, and took his final examinations at the Medical School. After the examinations he returned to his regiment, and served until the close of the war. For a time he was located at Kingston, N.C., and then at Abington. He came to Jamaica Plain in 1871, and had been a resident since that time. He leaves a widow, two daughters, and two sons.

1866. Dr. Robert Hillary Carey died July 23, 1905, after a stroke of apoplexy, at his home in Trepassey, Newfoundland. A widow, four sons, and three daughters survive him.

1869. Dr. Benjamin Knight died at his home in Santa Cruz, Cal., June 2, 1905, after a long illness following influenza, aged sixty-eight. He was a graduate of Harvard Medical School, and for many years local surgeon of the South Pacific Coast and Southern Pacific Railroads, a veteran of the Civil War, State senator in 1883, and president pro tem. of the Senate.

1870. Dr. Herbert Smith died Sept. 2, 1904, at Burin, Newfoundland. Dr. Smith was born at Merigonish, N.S., June 18, 1838. He practised medicine for twenty-seven years at his birthplace and seven years at Greenspond. He is survived by two sons, the older of whom is practising and the younger studying medicine.

1871. Dr. Edward Stickney Wood. See page 120.

sicians of Roxbury, Mass., died at Bad Nauheim, Germany, June 22, 1905.

Dr. Jackson was born at Gardiner, Me., Jan. 23, 1853. His parents were Dr. William Francis and Abby Crocker Jackson. When the children were quite young, the family removed to Roxbury, where the father soon established a large practice. The son attended the schools of the district, including Roxbury High, and upon his graduation he entered Technology, where he spent two years. He then entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1876.

Dr. Jackson spent the two years following his graduation abroad, studying in London, Paris, and Berlin. He returned to this country in 1878, and took up the practice of medicine. Soon afterward his father died, and Dr. Jackson succeeded to his practice. He was among the best known of the homœopathic school of medicine in this city, but in 1895 his health gave out, and since that time he had taken frequent trips to Europe for relief.

1882. Dr. Judson Coy, of Prince William, N.B., died at Wakefield, Mass., after a long illness, aged fifty-three.

1887. Dr. Henry P. Merrill died at his home in Portland, Me., aged sixty-two, May 11, 1905.

1888. Dr. John Dudley Paige, of Savannah, Ga., died suddenly in Boisé, Ida., March 23, 1905.

1893. Dr. Edward Payson Brown, aged thirty-nine, died May 25, 1905, from peritonitis, after an operation for appendicitis, at his home in Malden, Mass. He was a graduate of Harvard University Medical School. He served as city physician of Malden from 1895 to 1898, past president of the Malden Medical Society, and member and district censor of the Massachusetts Medical Society.

1900. Dr. Everett L. Creesey died May 20, 1905 from an overdose of morphine at his home in Beverly, Mass. He was a graduate of Harvard Medical School. He was an expert on hip disease, and had been working so hard of late that he could not sleep, and took morphine to quiet his nerves.

1903. Dr. Robert Fulton MacLachlan, born Dec. 18, 1877, at Frederickton, N.B.; died at Holbrook, Ariz., March 5, 1905.

JAMES R. CHADWICK.

The first entry in the book of records of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association, dated Nov. 26, 1890, is as follows:—

“In response to a call issued by Dr. James R. Chadwick, of Boston, a meeting was held at the Boston Medical Library, for the purpose of considering the advisability of forming a Harvard Medical School Alumni Association.”

At this meeting Dr. Chadwick was elected Chairman of a Committee on Organization, and, at a subsequent meeting on April 30, 1891, he was elected the first President.

Thus came into existence the Harvard Medical Alumni Association, created by the energy and enthusiasm of a man who, with the expiration of office, never allowed his interest to flag, and never relaxed his efforts to promote its welfare.

And now this Association is mourning his untimely death, in company with not only hundreds of individuals who were bound to him by ties of affection and respect, but with other organizations which looked up to him as their founder and moving spirit. For it was Dr. Chadwick's gift to see where the community or humanity at large might be benefited by the organization of some beneficent scheme or its crystallization into a definite enterprise. The Boston Medical Library, the American Gynæcological Society, the Massachusetts Cremation Society, besides many lesser bodies, share with the Harvard Medical Alumni Association the loss of their founder and best friend in the death of Dr. Chadwick.

Dr. Chadwick was found dead outside his summer residence at Chocorua, N.H., on the morning of Sept. 23, 1905. There was no witness to his death, but it is supposed that he was taken suddenly ill during the night, went to the balcony outside his window for air, was seized with vertigo, and fell over the low railing to the ground, some distance below. He was apparently in his customary health when last seen alive.

James Read Chadwick* was born in Boston, Nov. 2, 1844, the son of the late Christopher Chadwick, a Boston merchant, who married a daughter of the late James Read, of Boston. A brother, Frank Chadwick, is an artist who has lived abroad for many years. His only sister is the wife of General Charles A. Whittier, U.S.A., retired.

Mr. Chadwick was graduated at Harvard College with the class of '65 and at the Harvard Medical School in 1871. Marrying in that year Katherine M. Lyman, daughter of the late Dr. George H. Lyman, he took his wife to Europe, and pursued his medical studies in Berlin, Vienna, Paris, and London. On his return to Boston, in 1873, he built the residence at 270 Clarendon Street, and began the practice of his profession. At one time he was connected with the Massachusetts General Hospital, and later was on the staff of the Boston City Hospital.

From the time when Dr. Chadwick was graduated from the Harvard Medical School in 1871 he evinced an especial interest in the diseases of women, then a new specialty, and, after spending two years abroad in the study of this branch, he became one of the leading gynæcologists of Boston. It was through his efforts that the American Gynæcological Society was formed in 1876. He was the secretary and guiding spirit of the society for the first six years of its existence, and he continued to have a large share in the direction of its destinies even after he became President in 1897. His influence in the society was always on the side of high aims and able men and against self seeking and medical politicians.

Dr. Chadwick was an ardent book-lover, and was really the founder of the Boston Medical Library in 1875. From its inception he was the librarian, and he worked early and late in its interests, giving of his own library and means, and arousing enthusiasm for the same object in others. It was through his inspiration and untiring efforts, extending over a period of twenty-five years, that the present handsome building on the Fenway became possible. He always carried his want book with him on his frequent journeys, and many the librarian and book collector who has contributed of his store to complete the files of the Boston Medical Library, for Dr. Chadwick did not hesitate to make known his wants; and, in like measure, the duplicates of the library were always at the disposal of others. His last literary work was the preparation of a paper on the Library, to be read before the meeting of the Association of Hospital Superintendents, held in Boston last month.

He was much interested in the subject of cremation, and was for many years the President of the Massachusetts Cremation Society, laboring constantly to advance its interests. It was peculiarly fitting that his funeral should be held in the chapel of the crematory at Forest Hills, which he was to such a large extent instrumental in building.

Dr. Chadwick contributed numerous articles to medical literature, mainly on the topics of gynæcology, libraries, and cremation. His paper on the results of his researches in the anatomy and physiology of the rectum was a distinct advance on the knowledge of the time, and he has been quoted extensively in treatises and text-books on gynæcology. On his return from studying abroad, he translated Winckel's work on "Puerperal Fever," part of his time having been spent at the author's clinic in Dresden. During a later trip to the continent of Europe he picked up a rare pamphlet by Schöpff, a surgeon in the German contingent during our Revolutionary War, on the "Climate and Diseases of America." This he translated and edited, and it was published in part in this *Journal (Vol. 92) in 1875. The incident is characteristic of his keenness as a collector and bibliographer. He was a devoted admirer of Oliver Wendell Holmes, and made a considerable collection of early editions of his writings and of souvenirs of the man.

He was a ready and finished public speaker, and made numerous addresses in various parts of the country on the subjects which interested him most. A man of many interests, broad-minded and singularly free from narrow prejudices,

BOSTON: PUBLISHED BY THE ASSOCIATION
1906.

"Had he lived in the time of Charles the First, a Cavalier he certainly would have been, though there were not altogether wanting in him those serious and pragmatistical characteristics making in the Roundheads the background against which we more brilliantly limn the men who could lighten the passage of a waning cause with sword and song together.

"His sense of humor, his light-heartedness, his raillery, were the silken shoulder-cloak beneath which he wore his shirt of mail, flexible and but hardly penetrable. On ground that he believed, or pretended to believe, to be firm, he was no mean controversialist; and the blade of his wit hung not in a clinging scabbard, but in a hip knot, and was quick in lunge and ready in recover. In the very mien and carriage of him on such occasions there was that which runs between the lines of one of his favorite later poets, 'The sweet sound of steel upon steel in the joyous passage of arms at Ashby.'

"If the dress, simple, but unconventional, set forth the man, so also did his chosen surroundings. The office in which he received his patients alone—never, though thereto urged, in the presence of an office nurse, because, as he said, his patients were entitled to a privileged communication—seemed quite as much a library or a museum as an office. The spaces between the windows and the walls not hung with sketches, portraits, and curios, were covered with books; the single table heaped with manuscripts and letters, from which complex mass, after due stirring, any desired communication, recognized by a protruding corner, would be seized, withdrawn, and submitted to perusal. He rarely failed to find a wished-for paper, though the memorizing process by which it was located might well be a source of wonder, and seemed to enjoy, in preference to the more orderly pigeon-holing of documents, an apparent disorder, akin to "sweet disarray," which comported with the misarrangement of the books upon the shelves; whose seemingly careless or unfelicitous groupings had a reason in the relations of contained passages to the complex of which he held the key.

"It was a place in which to sit cosily of an evening, between lamplight and firelight, with comrades or with the silent companionship of books and writing work, as the late glow of his windows often testified; and the very furniture of the room bespoke its hospitality, the chairs were so easy to slip into and so very hard to get out of.

"An omnivorous reader, he was well calculated to be the founder of a library, and, though for some years a sufferer from physical ills, his courage was untouched, his cheerfulness undimmed, and his hospitality unabated.

"Of the professional work done in that office the personal testimonials are many, not merely work in his especial line of service, but in the broader sociological field which is the opportunity of every physician. 'I never,' said a good woman, whose daily life carried her much among the needy of her sex, 'took a poor girl to Dr. Chadwick that he did not give to her his personal attention, and to me help in what I had to do for her.' It was a place to which to carry perplexities and sorrows; and another woman, whose way was set with many thorny places, said, 'As I look back over the thirty years of his friendship, I can truthfully say it was one of the greatest blessings of my life.'

"Here, too, centred that solace which each man, for himself, in some form needs, in being or in thought; for home, whether in the house in town or in the summer resting-place, whose shady up-hill road tempted the bidden wayfarer, meant much to Dr. Chadwick. Here, as in his larger human contact, his ability to meet suggestions was apparent; and his children said, 'He was as young as any of us.'

"This ability, expressed through his responsive versatility, enabled him, while pivoted upon his own centre of thought, to turn quickly to any magnetic point upon the horizon, like the needle of a compass, or to swerve toward it, like the versatile anther of a flower, and did much toward the making of those varied friendships which he enjoyed, and through which he sought to serve, and which were all instinct, on his part, with a happiness in being helpful. Through this combination of versatility and constancy he was led to ignore the lesser qualities in his new-found friends, and to point straightly at that which made for distinction, while his generosity was exemplified in his ready recognition of a new thought, a new idea, or a new purpose; and his warmth in welcoming it was equalled by his frankness in bespeaking its credit or furthering its development.

"The pleasure with which he unearthed a book that might be made the nucleus of a collection, and that recognizing a trait of character his hold upon which might mean the saving of an individual life to better uses, came from the same cheerful, hopeful, and unfailing source. The sorrows that he lightened, the entanglements that he helped to unravel, the paths that he sought to make straight, are a part of his professional confidences. Some of them are known to some of us, and we are glad of the knowledge.

"To his collaborators, and especially to young men and young women entering the medical profession, he was most generous of his time, of his judgment, and of more material help,—outputs which find no written record, but are to be passed on, with the memory of his personality, in the lives of others. That he was not only willing, but eager, to help within his powers has been abundantly evidenced; and the very last occasion of his visit to Chocorua, where he met his death, was the freeing from difficulty of a patient and the provision of her maintenance during the remainder of her life. After an evening passed in working with his lawyer toward the fulfilment of this purpose, he said, 'Now that is done, let us have some music, and go to bed.' And so went to his rest, and was seen alive no more.

"That he was beloved by those who knew him, as patients, dependants, or associates, was the fruit not only of his personality, but of his unvaried constancy as well,—a persistent trait which has enabled one who worked with him for thirty years to say, 'He was always the same,—always bright and cheery, and always with a new story or an old quotation to lighten the labors of the day.'

"To make such a personality effective, it must have one quality, that of self-forgetfulness; and the outward semblance of it must be true, and not assumed. Self-abnegation implies consciousness, and of self-abnegation there was none in Dr. Chadwick. Credit to self was something to be put aside as of no importance in the face of a purpose at hand. Of this characteristic there are many instances, but the last of them has an especial bearing upon our thought to-day.

"On the recent occasion of a farewell dinner the chief guest, who knew him well, expressed a wish that a portrait of Dr. Chadwick might be procured by his professional friends who best knew his great service in the conservation of medical literature, for presentation to the Boston Medical Library. The declaration to Dr. Chadwick of this purpose was met with a refusal so emphatic as to put a speedy end to the plan. 'It is good to work,' he said, 'and, if the work is good, let other men take it up and carry it on; but there is no need of portrayal.'

"To us, with the memory of him so immediate, portrayal is not needed; but it is good to have the assurance, for those who come after, that his portrait will find its place here. So strong, so clear, so instinct, with his life is this our immediate memory that it seems almost as if that door should open and that he should enter; that we, assembled in this building, the embodiment of his keen desire, should be, as indeed in verity we are, his guests, and he the genial, hospitable, welcoming host."

Dr. James G. Mumford spoke as follows:—

"It falls to few men that they are numbered with the immortals, and especially is this true of us physicians. Such memorialists as we have are honest friends in our own ranks, who now and again speak of us when dead in words from the heart,—words buried mostly, for all they affect the larger world. Now and again a Holmes raises his voice in eulogy, or a Virchow or a Paget. Happy he of whom such men have said the final word. But there are few words from the makers of great literature.

"It is written, 'By their deeds ye shall know them.' By his deeds, then, we shall know Dr. Chadwick. Will you pardon me for paraphrasing the words of a great American? If they are out of tune, Dr. Chadwick would be the first to smile. It is not what we feebly may say here: it is what he did here which shall live. This library is his creation, if we may believe spoken tradition and what has been written. More than any man among us he saw the meaning of what these walls stand for, and he devoted himself for more than thirty years to forwarding this work. His conception was broad, catholic, and democratic. These great collections, these groaning stacks, these abundant files, these noble halls, these busts, pictures, memorials, illustrate, in some faint way, his conception of what a great literary foundation might become if consecrated broadly to the uses of education and science. He believed the Medical Library to be the heart of our system. Lecture-rooms, laboratories, hospitals, serve their indispensable purposes. In them observations are made and deductions drawn, but the library is dedicated to the recording of knowledge. We collect here the treasures of the past, the works of our great prophets, without whose labors we should be as naught. Year after year we store in our files the records of science in process of evolution, and daily we add to our shelves the new books of most advanced thought.

"Dr. Chadwick had something of the poet's as well as of the artist's temperament, and the silent potential of a noble library appealed to and stirred him deeply. He looked beyond the present. He believed that about this library there would come to centre the best scientific work and thought of a multitude; toward this Mecca, as a common meeting-ground, would be turned the steps of all physicians who labor to up-build, to broaden, and to dignify our profession, and that from here should emanate the concentrated wisdom, persuasion, and professional authority of our community.

"I believe I have not misconstrued our friend's sentiments or misinterpreted his ambitions.

"His was a nature of buoyant optimism and frank reasonableness. In his death our Association suffers a great loss, not irreparable, as he himself would have said. His good works were many; and, even though his accomplishments were not always commensurate with his pains, as is the fate of us all, this library will remain,—a monument to a devoted, far-seeing, and unselfish officer and friend."

Dr. John W. Farlow read the Librarian's Report, and concluded as follows:—

"Our thoughts, in this Thirtieth Report, are always turning back to the memory and services of the one who wrote the other twenty-nine, who was instrumental in starting this society, and who, more than any one else, contributed to its progress by his interest, knowledge, tenacity of purpose, and particularly by his enthusiasm. The story of the library is practically the story of his activity.

"For some time after the library was established, the books, as they were received, were placed on the shelves without special arrangement, and Dr. Brigham had to trust to his memory in getting the books when called for.

"This was before the starting of the Index Catalogue. During the winter of 1879-80 Dr. Chadwick brought to the attention of the Committee the necessity of having the books properly arranged and catalogued, and he spent a great deal of time and thought on this subject of proper classification, even up to the time of his death.

"As to the sources from which he gathered so many books and journals, he had a wonderful faculty for ascertaining and never forgetting where the desired volumes were to be found. He had also a most persuasive way of appealing to the generosity and inciting the interest of members of the profession, and others as well, in connection with his desires for the library, whether books, pamphlets, autographs, paintings, or photographs.

"Through his long friendship with Dr. Billings and Dr. Fletcher he secured large numbers of books and periodicals which we much needed, and in return sent to Washington numerous boxes of what was of value to the Surgeon-General.

"Nearly all the manual labor of looking over, selecting, and making ready this great amount of material was done by Dr. Chadwick alone. I well remember, several years ago, spending nearly all day with him in the basement of the Surgeon-General's library in Washington, overhauling great piles of journals, climbing on shelves, standing on step ladders, selecting from among the dusty journals what might be needed for our own collections. This sort of work he has done alone several times a year for twenty years.

"He established most friendly relations with other medical libraries, but his gifts far exceeded what he received in return. In his last annual report he stated that one hundred and one large boxes of periodicals and some books had thus been distributed by him.

"The picking out, laying aside, according to the want-lists, this enormous number of journals, was to a very large extent his own work. These boxes were sent to Portland, Me., and Portland, Ore., to Concord, N.H., St. Paul, Minn., Chicago, San Francisco, Seattle, Baltimore, Montreal, and many other libraries. The successful starting of medical libraries in many of the smaller cities, especially in New England, is due in a large measure to his advice and help, and particularly to his large-hearted generosity in the contribution to their scantily filled shelves of books and periodicals, which he never wearied in choosing for them according to their various needs. When we moved from Boylston Place to this building, an immense number of journals, most of them duplicates, which had been stored in Jamaica Plain, Forest Hills, and other places, were brought here, and deposited in the basement, filling three rooms from floor to ceiling. The separation of these thousands of journals according to language, country, subject, year, and then in chronological order, the taking out of what was needed for our own files and the proper disposal of the remainder, was work of about three years; and here Dr. Chadwick was found several hours a day, nearly every day, including holidays and Sundays, and often also in the evening.

"What he accomplished and with what labor is probably known to but few of you, but it made a great impression upon me.

"In 1877, when I was a medical student, I helped him, in a very small way, to arrange the books and periodicals then beginning to accumulate in the rooms in Hamilton Place. Twenty-five years later I saw in him the same intense interest, the readiness to work, the contagious enthusiasm, and I wondered how many men of sixty years were as eager to work, mentally and physically, as they were at thirty-five.

"He lived to see the medical books and periodicals of the Boston Athenæum, Harvard College, the Tiedemann Library, and the Boston Public Library, deposited in this library, which he had hoped would be the Academy of Medicine, the medical centre of Greater Boston, even of New England.

"When we look about in this building for the room reserved for his use, for his desk; for anything pertaining to him alone, we find nothing. There is no librarian's room, he had no desk, no closet, no drawer, merely a small wire basket in one corner of a shelf in the cataloguer's room, in which were placed various memoranda, old catalogues, and odds and ends.

"The whole library building was his field of action. He was no sedentary bookworm, but a worker and inciter to work, as the library staff will testify from long years of personal knowledge. And yet during these years he was in active medical practice and a frequent contributor to medical and other literature.

"In trying to define what the duties of the Librarian of the Boston Medical Library are, in the light of what was done for thirty years by Dr. Chadwick, it seems impossible to set any limit as to time or amount and variety of work. The standard set by him was too high, his energy and enthusiasm too great, and the work of his successors must fall short of what the members of this society are accustomed to expect. The Boston Medical Library has lost its best friend."

HISTORY OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL.

The three large volumes of Dr. Thomas F. Harrington's lately completed work furnish reading of absorbing interest, not alone to the graduate of the Harvard Medical School, but also to the student of the history of medical education and progress in this country, to the pedagogue, and to the antiquarian. The author has spared no effort to accumulate all available data on his subject. The record of every meeting of the Corporation, Board of Overseers, and Faculty, has been searched, as well as numerous papers in the custody of historical societies and individuals. The result is an interesting narrative and an authoritative collection of facts, which cannot fail to be of permanent value as a work of reference.

As a preliminary to the subject proper, Dr. Harrington depicts the general conditions of medical education and practice in the colonies prior to 1782. During that period, men fitted themselves to be physicians by apprenticing themselves to doctors engaged in active practice, and started to engage in their profession without a degree or any other authority except their own sense of fitness. A few, indeed, obtained degrees abroad; but only nine graduates of the college were so distinguished between the years 1750 and 1782. The chief medical practitioners and teachers of this time in Boston were Joseph Warren, Cotton Tufts, Simon Tufts, John Jeffries, and Joseph Floyd, all graduates of the college. The introduction of inoculation with the virus of small-pox as a protection against the disease is an important incident of this time; and the controversy between Cotton Mather and Dr. Zabdiel Boylston, on the one hand, and the unbelievers, on the other, furnishes interesting reading. Valuable biographies are here given of graduates of the college who practised medicine previous to the establishment of the Medical Faculty in the eighteenth century.

The school may be said to have been founded when, in 1782, the Corporation elected John Warren Professor of Anatomy and Surgery. One month later Benjamin Waterhouse was elected Professor of the Theory and Practice of Physic, and six months later Aaron Dexter became Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica. These three gentlemen were solemnly inducted into office on Oct. 7, 1783, and the degree of Bachelor of Medicine was conferred on the first graduating class of two men in 1788. From this date until 1810, when the school was removed to Boston, there were 51 medical graduates, of whom no less than 41 had been graduated previously in arts.

It is interesting to learn that even in these early days the teachers realized the paramount importance of clinical instruction, and tried to obtain control of public clinical opportunities. The Almshouse afforded an average of fifty sick and infirm inmates, the Marine Hospital in Charlestown had thirty patients, and the State Prison and Boston Dispensary furnished their quota, which were utilized as clinical material by the teachers who held positions as visiting physicians to these institutions. Thus from its foundation to the present time the Harvard Medical School, while offering unusually rich clinical opportunities to its students, has, nevertheless, not had absolute control of a hospital.

Until 1810 the lectures were given in Cambridge. In that year the school was removed to Boston, and was housed at first in rooms over White's apothecary shop, No. 49 Marlborough Street, now that part of Washington Street between School and Summer Streets. In these rooms Dr. John C. Warren, the son, had for six years been giving a private course of lectures in anatomy. In 1811 the Corporation first officially designated the Medical Department as the "Faculty of Medicine," which now consisted of six members, an Adjunct Professorship of Anatomy and Surgery and of Chemistry and Materia Medica and a Professorship of Clinical Medicine having been added to the already existing ones. The incumbents of these new chairs were respectively John C. Warren, John Gorham, and James Jackson.

Chapter XII. tells of vaccination and its introduction here by Dr. Waterhouse, who performed the first vaccinations in America upon his seven children, and then demonstrated his faith in his conviction by sending three of them among the patients at the small-pox hospital and inoculating a fourth with virus from a small-pox pustule. Needless to say, none of them contracted the disease. An incident less to the credit of Dr. Waterhouse was his secret participation in a scheme by outside practitioners who were jealous of the growing prestige of the Medical Faculty to establish a rival school, to be called the "Massachusetts College of Physicians." The project failed, but Waterhouse, partly in consequence of this and partly owing to the strained relations existing for some time with other members of the Faculty, was removed from his Professorship, and was succeeded by Dr. Jackson. Soon afterward the school removed to a new building on Mason Street, erected partly by financial aid from the State, on which account it was for many years called the Massachusetts Medical College.

Volume II. opens with an account of the growth of the University, details of the government of the Medical School and the elaboration of the curriculum. There follows an account of various rivals which threatened the prosperity of the school, but which, having fulfilled their functions of stimulating the older institution to greater effort, have passed out of existence. The Berkshire Medical School, established in Pittsfield in 1823, had a strong corps of teachers, and flourished until 1867. During these years it had 1,566 students and 446 graduates, while Harvard had 1,501 students and 345 graduates. The Tremont Medical School, established in Boston in 1838, chiefly by teachers in the Harvard School, was not a rival. Its curriculum allowed more elasticity in the choice of studies and it became practically a summer school, and was useful in developing a younger corps of teachers. The Boylston Medical School was started in 1847, and for some time was quite successful, until later crippled by the transfer of some of its teachers to Harvard. The petition of this school to the Legislature in 1854, asking for the right to confer degrees says: "The number of physicians all admit to be too great. The Boylston School asks not to make physicians more numerous, but better." Evidently, the profession faced the same condition then as now, and the recent course of our Medical School proclaims the same ideal which animated its rival in 1854.

Chapters XXI., XXII., XXIII., deal with the growth of the School, its removal to the North Grove Street building, additions to the Faculty, the development of the Summer School, and the establishment of medical charities in and about Boston, which contributed to the clinical advantages of the School.

Chapter XXIV. contains an account of the discovery and introduction of ether anæsthesia, and the controversy between Morton and Jackson. Chapters XXV., XXVI., and XXVII. deal with matters not directly connected with the Medical School, but of general interest to the medical historian, such as the Webster murder trial, the obtaining of bodies for dissection, a review of anatomy laws, and laws regulating the practice of medicine, the establishment of medical societies and medical libraries, etc. Chapter XXVIII. gives biographies of a number of eminent graduates, and the volume ends with a review of those graduates who served in the Civil and Spanish Wars.

Volume III. brings the history down from the beginning of President Eliot's administration to the present time. The opening chapter contains a critical review of the general conditions of medical education in America, and of its defects as compared with the English and Continental systems, of which the most glaring then, as now, was the administration of schools and hospitals by independent and sometimes hostile boards of control. Efforts toward improvement were beginning to be made all over the country, and Harvard had undeniably her share in the leadership of the movement. She was not always first, however. The Chicago Medical College (now Northwestern University) in 1859 adopted a graded course of three years, of six months each,—a plan which had been rejected by the Harvard Faculty. But later the young president and the younger members of the Faculty made their influence felt, and the establishment of a graded course, the lengthening of the term from three to four years, and the requirement of a degree in arts or sciences as a condition for admission marked the most important steps in the forward progress of medical education.

Many events of local interest to Harvard men are reviewed in these pages. The breach between the Massachusetts Medical Society and the American Medical Association recalls a bitter controversy, now tardily, but completely ended.

The public meeting to raise funds for the Boylston Street School and the completion of that modest subscription is in sharp contrast with the way the money was raised for the present vast undertaking, and furnishes, perhaps, an apt illustration of the genius of two periods scarcely twenty years apart. The controversy over the proposed admission of women in 1882 is fully described in Chapter XLI., and may prove a convenient reference when the arguments pro and con are reviewed in the future. Similarly, Chapter XLII. describes the efforts to obtain an extension of the suffrage, whereby graduates of the professional schools, as well as of the academic department, may have the right to vote for Overseers. Chapters XLV. and XLVI. contain a list of all teachers ever connected with the school, a list of all benefactors, and short biographical sketches of present members of the Faculty. The last two hundred pages of Volume III. comprise an index of the 4,595 Alumni of the School, with brief biographical data and addresses of every living graduate so far as known. No trouble has been spared to make this list as complete as possible, and it will prove invaluable as a reference.

These volumes are written in a spirit of critical historical impartiality. Faculty and University scandals, professional jealousies and intrigues, where they have a bearing on the subject proper, are set down honestly, but without undue emphasis. The whole is written in a vein of just optimism, which must be shared by him who makes himself familiar with the achievements of the School in the face of opposition and reverses.

We wish that we could render equal congratulations to the publishers for their share of the work. The letterpress, paper, and binding are disappointing considering that the volumes were sold by subscription at so high a price. It is to be regretted that the author and editor could not have had control of all details of the work, but it is fortunate that the loyalty and public spirit of these two graduates induced them to give so generously of their time and skill, and prevented the performance of the work by hands unskilled and careless.

GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION.

BY CLARENCE JOHN BLAKE, M.D.

One of the marked influences in the change in method of medical education during the past fifty years has been that incident to the introduction of specialized teaching.

Within that period most of the so-called specialties in medicine have attained a prominence entitling them to departmental distribution in the enumeration of the divisions of the medical school curriculum, though they are in effect, and must ultimately become recognized, as the standard of general medical education advances, as lines of teaching subsidiary to the main general departments.

The division of labor incident to specialization in laboratory research and clinical observation has been productive of a much more rapid advance than was previously possible; and, as a natural result, the graduate in medicine finds himself increasingly under the necessity of applying to the medical school for newer information, either for the purpose of supplementing his undergraduate education by the acquisition of that which has been later taught or for the purpose of filling deficiencies of which he has become aware through experience in an individual practice, entailing dependence upon his own resources.

The primary purpose of the medical school being the training of its students for the practical application of that which they have learned, that function must remain, but must now, in the newer order of affairs, be supplemented by some form of provision for graduate students, either those of its own creation or graduates of other medical schools.

The task of such provision falls, naturally, to the larger medical schools, the medical departments of universities, possessed of larger laboratory facilities, controlling extensive clinical material, and commanding the services of a large body of teachers. Upon such schools, both because of their ability and for the furtherance of their own advancement, some form of adequate provision for graduate students is incumbent.

To be adequate, the graduate department—for such it must ultimately come to be—of a medical school must be constructed to meet demands variable as to periods of time and as to character of the instruction given.

As regards periods of time, the graduate students fall into two classes: first, those devoting a year or more to continuous study, supplementary to their undergraduate work, including special research and laboratory courses, as well as clinical courses; and, second, those already practitioners who can devote but a few weeks in each year to graduate study and who seek information mainly along clinical lines.

As regards the character of the instruction sought, there are three fairly distinct classes of graduate students: those seeking opportunity for original research; those taking laboratory courses, with or without supplementary clinical observation; and those taking clinical courses only. Of these three classes the first is largely in the minority and the last greatly in the majority, the proportionate numeric relationship of all these classes being a variable factor.

To meet these varying requirements, it is necessary that the graduate department should have an exceedingly elastic curriculum, and that this elasticity should be evidenced in the ability of the department to meet the special demand of any individual graduate student in time, in teaching, or in material.

To effect this, to avail of the existent laboratory, clinical, and teaching facilities of the medical school, and, where necessary, to supplement them, without interference with the primal purpose of the school in undergraduate education, it is necessary that the graduate teaching should be under the control of the undergraduate faculty, and equally necessary that it should be distinctly recognized as a separate branch of the medical school work, the self-suggestive measures to this end being the commission of graduate teaching to a committee of the faculty, as a board of control, or the creation of a graduate department with a faculty formed of representative members of different branches of instruction.

Whatever form may be chosen for the administration and control of the graduate teaching, its governing body should be empowered to temporarily assimilate—by annual appointment, for instance—such extra-mural teachers having command of material as the maintenance of the elasticity of the graduate curriculum may require.

With a graduate department having for its faculty members of the faculty of the undergraduate school, administering its own finances, so far as the regulation of its fees and their proportionate allotment to graduate teachers are concerned, entitled to avail of valuable clinical material and of promising teachers outside of the needs of the undergraduate department, having its own official machinery for correspondence and for publication, the whole under the final control of the medical school proper, there would be provided a self-supporting and sufficiently independent organization, which could not fail to grow in good service, and, in growing, could not fail to redound in many ways to the advantage of the medical school and of medical teaching as a whole.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE MEDICAL SCHOOL—1905-06.

The registration of regular undergraduate students at the Medical School was, on Oct. 28, 1905, as follows:—

Fourth year	69
Third year	65
Second year	60
First year	77
	271

One year previously, Oct. 29, 1904, it was as follows:—

Fourth year	78
Third year	69
Second year	69
First year	66
	282

Disregarding graduate and summer students, therefore, the total number of students shows a decrease of eleven since a year ago. Analysis of the figures shows, however, that this decrease occurs in the second, third, and fourth year classes, which show a normal falling off, due to the retirement of men for financial or personal reasons. The first year, on the other hand, shows an increase of eleven new matriculants over last year. During the five years in which a degree in Arts, Science, Literature, or Philosophy, has been required for admission, the number of new students in the entering classes have been as follows:—

1901	67
1902	83
1903	78
1905	77

These fluctuating figures certainly admit of no self-congratulatory generalization about the growth of the school. We spoke last year of the decrease in the number of medical students reported from many of the best schools, and this year come more definite statements from England, France, Germany, and this country to the same effect. Under these circumstances the gain in the first-year class this year may pre-sage as sure and steady an improvement in numbers as has already taken place in the general qualifications of the students for the study of medicine.

The official register of the school for this year contains as a frontispiece a folder showing the impressive front elevation of the five new buildings. Opposite page 10 is inserted a ground plan of the new buildings, surrounded by tentative plans of the hospitals which will eventually be established there. The Register speaks as follows of the new buildings:—

In the spring of 1896 the Medical School will move from its present quarters on Boylston Street to commodious new buildings on Longwood Avenue, distant about a mile from the present building. At the new site the school possesses twenty-six acres of land. Eleven acres are now occupied by the Medical School buildings. The other fifteen are reserved for hospitals, which, it is hoped, will be built on this ground in the near future.

The new buildings are five in number. One is designed for administrative and four for laboratory purposes. The administration building contains the necessary offices, several lecture-rooms, and the Warren Anatomical Museum. The laboratory buildings provide extensive accommodations for various departments grouped in the buildings as follows: (1) anatomy, comparative anatomy, histology, and embryology; (2) physiology and chemistry; (3) pathology, bacteriology, and surgical pathology; (4) hygiene, pharmacology, comparative pathology, and surgical research.

The laboratory buildings are all constructed on one general plan,—two parallel wings united by an amphitheatre. Above each amphitheatre is a large departmental library. The rooms in the various wings have been designed on a unit system, which will greatly simplify any changes required by future growth or by uses other than those for which the rooms were originally designed. These buildings will provide an equipment for teaching and research in various branches of medical science, which as a whole is probably unequalled.

For the construction and endowment of these new buildings the school is indebted to the generosity of Mrs. Collis P. Huntington, Messrs. J.

Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, David Sears, and a number of other benefactors.

The list of members of the Faculty (not counting President Eliot), the Instructors, Assistants, and Austin Teaching Fellows, contains 145 names. The total number of regular undergraduate students is 271, which gives a proportion of one teacher to 1.88 students. If we include the 19 graduate students at present in the school, we get a proportion of exactly one teacher to every two students. To be quite accurate, however, the four professors in the Dental School, whose names appear in the Medical Faculty, should be subtracted from the list, leaving 141 teachers in the Medical School proper. The proportion of teachers to regular students then becomes 1 to 1.92, or, adding the graduate students, the proportion is 1 to 2.05. Evidently, the principle of individual instruction and teaching to small groups of students cannot be carried much farther, unless the individual himself can be divided into sections.

In the Medical Faculty we miss the names of Edward S. Wood, Professor of Chemistry, deceased, and of Francis H. Davenport, Assistant Professor of Gynæcology, resigned. Their places have not been filled. On the Administrative Board the place of Professor Wood is taken by Dr. John Warren, Demonstrator of Anatomy.

In the list of Instructors, Lecturers, and Assistants we note the following changes:—

Drs. H. H. A. Beach, John W. Elliot, and John C. Munro have resigned as Lecturers on Surgery, and their places have not been filled.

Dr. Charles F. Withington has resigned as Instructor in Clinical Medicine, and his place is not filled.

Dr. Edwin E. Jack has been promoted from Assistant to be Instructor in Ophthalmology.

Dr. James O. Jordan has resigned as Assistant in Materia Medica, and his place is taken by Dr. Louis Nelson.

Dr. John W. Bartol has been made Assistant in Clinical Medicine.

Dr. James G. Mumford has resigned as Instructor in Surgery, and his place is taken by Dr. Robert B. Greenough, promoted from Assistant.

Dr. Samuel S. Maxwell has resigned as Instructor in Physiology, and his place is taken by Dr. Ralph S. Lillie.

Dr. William A. Brooks, Jr., has resigned as Assistant in Surgery, and his place is not filled.

Dr. Alexander Quackenboss has been promoted from Assistant to Instructor in Ophthalmology.

Dr. Eugene A. Crockett has been promoted from Assistant to be Instructor in Otology.

Mr. Ezra R. Thayer, LL.B., has been appointed Lecturer on the Relation of the Medical Profession to the Law and the Courts.

Dr. Harvey P. Towle and Dr. Frederick S. Burns have been appointed Assistants in Dermatology.

Dr. Elliott P. Joslin has been promoted from Assistant to be Instructor in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Drs. Arthur M. Worthington, George L. Baker, and Francis W. Palfrey have been appointed Assistants in Bacteriology.

Dr. Hibbert W. Hill has resigned as Instructor in Bacteriology.

Dr. George B. Magrath has resigned as Assistant in Pathology, and his place is taken by Dr. Harry C. Low.

Drs. Walter A. Lecompte and E. de W. Wales have been appointed Assistants in Otology.

Dr. Henry A. Christian has resigned as Instructor in Pathology, and been appointed Instructor in the Theory and Practice of Physics.

Dr. Carl L. Alsberg has been promoted from Assistant in Physiological Chemistry to be Instructor in Biological Chemistry.

Dr. Robert L. Emerson has resigned as Instructor in Physiological Chemistry.

Dr. David H. Walker has resigned as Assistant in Hygiene, and his place is not filled.

Dr. Clarence W. Keene has resigned as Assistant in Neuropathology and in Pathology.

Dr. Horace Binney has been appointed Assistant in Anatomy.

Dr. Walter R. Brinckerhoff has been appointed Instructor in Pathology.

Dr. Frederick T. Lord has been appointed Assistant in Clinical Medicine.

Dr. Lawrence J. Henderson has been appointed Instructor in Biological Chemistry.

Dr. S. Burt Wolbach has been appointed Assistant in Pathology.

Dr. George H. Wright has been appointed Assistant in Histology.

As Austin Teaching Fellows, Drs. Erving Taylor, Frank L. Richardson, and Herbert R. Brown have been replaced by Dr. Fred T. Murphy in Surgery, Dr. William L. Holt in Comparative Pathology, and Dr. Fred. W. Thyng in Histology and Embryology.

The division of studies is the same as last year, except that those of the whole fourth year consist of electives. The scheme of these electives was fully explained by Professor F. B. Mallory in the Bulletin of July, 1905. Each elective counts one hundred and twenty-five hours, and electives must be chosen aggregating one thousand hours. There are no examinations in these studies.

There are few changes of note in the methods of instruction. In Surgery the teaching force has been reduced from 32 to 27, which includes teachers of Surgery proper, Genito-urinary Surgery, Surgical Pathology, and Orthopedics. Professor John C. Warren, who has resigned from the active staff of the Massachusetts General Hospital, continues to hold the Mosely Professorship of Surgery, and gives lectures and clinical demonstrations as before. In the fourth year students who show a desire to specialize in surgery by taking more than one half-course are required to write a thesis, concerning which the following recommendations are made:—

1. Each fourth-year student who elects two months of Surgery will be required to prepare and present a "thesis."
2. The subject of this thesis shall be some topic in Surgery, and shall be based upon a surgical case or series of cases, which will be assigned to the student at one of the hospitals.

3. The accurate and complete report of this case or series of cases shall form the basis of the thesis, but shall be supplemented by a thorough review of the current literature of the subject under consideration.

4. Original investigations of hospital records and pathological specimens, and experimental work may be undertaken by students who are properly qualified, and will receive due credit.

5. Theses of conspicuous merit will be selected for presentation before the class or at other medical meetings, and, if of sufficient value as contributions to surgical literature, will be published and circulated in the Bulletin of the Division of Surgery.

6. The time allowed for the preparation of a thesis will be decided in each instance by the surgeon who assigns the case and after opportunity has been given for a thorough discussion between the student and the instructor. Cases will be assigned at the Boston City Hospital by Dr. J. B. Blake and at the Massachusetts General Hospital by Dr. R. B. Greenough.

7. The regulations of the hospitals must be strictly observed by the student in visiting and examining the case which is assigned to him; and patients must be treated kindly and politely, and with due consideration for their mental and physical sensibilities.

8. The student is free to make use of any data obtained from the Hospital Records, X-ray examinations, Laboratory Reports, etc., but the accuracy of these records will not be accepted unless confirmed by analyses and examinations made by the student. Vaginal, ophthalmological, and aural examinations, however, are to be made only with the consent and in the presence of the attending surgeon or house officer.

9. Theses are to be neatly written or typewritten on paper of regulation size. A broad margin is to be reserved on the left-hand side for proof corrections, and only one side of the paper is to be written upon. No thesis shall exceed the limit of 2,500 words in length.

10. English composition, spelling, grammar, form, and style will receive consideration in the general estimate of the value of a thesis, and must conform to accepted standards in literature.

11. Theses which are not acceptable will be returned for revision, and the presentation of a satisfactory thesis will be demanded as part of the required work for all students electing two or more months in Surgery.

BIBLIOGRAPHY.

The thorough presentation of a subject in Medicine or Surgery demands that the writer be familiar with all the papers of importance which have been written upon that topic; and the knowledge of how to investigate the bibliography of a subject is therefore of great importance to every student and practitioner. The subjects of interest to the student in Surgery to-day are those which are at present under consideration by the surgical world, and papers upon these subjects are being published from day to day in the current medical journals. No text-book, no matter how recently published, can come within six months or a year of current knowledge. This does not mean, however, that text-books are to be rejected, for each good text-book gives a valuable summary of the accumulated knowledge up to the time of its publication; and the text-books are thus an excellent point of departure for an investigation of medical or surgical literature. From a text-book may be obtained a general summary of a subject up to a certain period of time, and from this source references to the most important special articles in medical journals can usually be secured. In almost every subject in Surgery epoch-making papers have been published from time to time; and it is to these articles that the text-book references will lead. From these epoch-making papers, again, other references may be obtained, and the subject can thus readily be traced backward as far as the historical side of the matter may justify. This may be called the simple method of looking up a medical subject.

A more thorough and satisfactory method, and one which can be employed when text-book references are not available, starts with one of the index catalogues of medical literature, such as the Index Medicus, Schmidt's Jahrbuch, the Literature Index of the Journal of the American Medical Association, Gould's Year Book or "Progressive Medicine." From these books the articles on different subjects can be ascertained, and the articles themselves (or, if necessary, abstracts and translations of them) can then be directly consulted. References can be conveniently written down on catalogue cards as fast as they are obtained, and a note made, when the article is read, of the more important facts which are presented.

For the most recent publications upon any subject the files of current journals must be reviewed. All of the important medical publications may be found at the Boston Medical Library, where they may be consulted by the student.

After the literature of a given subject has been well investigated, the results should be put in accessible form. This is best done by dividing the subject into headings, and by placing under each division the reference cards, which are there especially of importance. Any medical subject may be divided into the divisions adopted in the standard text-books; i.e., Definition, History, Anatomy, Etiology, Pathology, Symptoms, Diagnosis, Complications, and Sequelæ, Treatment, Prognosis, Bibliography. This is recognized as the natural and logical method of presenting the subject of a medical or surgical disease, and may be adapted to the purposes of the majority of medical communications.

Before the actual composition of a thesis is begun, the student should prepare a "brief," consisting of headings and sub-headings, in which the subject-matter can be arranged in logical sequence, and a just proportion of space allotted to every part. This brief may then be expanded until each sub-heading will represent a paragraph of the finished product, and from a brief of this nature the final manuscript may readily and rapidly be prepared.

At the end of every thesis the main points of the paper should be concisely summarized by the writer, and his conclusions stated in simple, forceful language. His indebtedness to other writers should also be recognized by the publication of the references to literature of which he has made use. Each article should be acknowledged, giving the name of the writer, the date, the title, the Journal, and the volume and page; or, in the case of a book, the name of the author, date, title, and the name of the publisher.

In the Department of Obstetrics and Gynæcology the lectures of former Professor Davenport are given by Professor Green and his associates.

In Legal Medicine, Ezra R. Thayer, LL.B., will deliver a voluntary course of not more than six lectures on The Relation of the Medical Profession to the Law and the Courts, during February, on evenings to be announced later. These lectures will be open to students and to the profession.

Legal Medicine is no longer taught as a separate study, but the several departments will give instruction in the medico-legal aspects of their respective subjects.

The list of elective courses offered to the fourth year and the number of men who have elected each course are as follows:—

Anatomy, 33.

Histology and Embryology, 0.

Physiology, 0.

Physiological and Pathological Chemistry, 0.

Bacteriology, 2.

Neuropathology, 3.

Hygiene, 1.

Clinical Medicine, 63.

Theory and Practice, 46.

Pediatrics, 58.

Clinical Surgical Pathology, 4.

Surgery, 61.

Genito-urinary Surgery, 9.

Orthopedics, 32.

Surgical Pathology, 5.

Obstetrics, 41.
Gynæcology, 28.
Dermatology and Syphilis, 10.
Neurology and Psychiatry, 13.
Ophthalmology, 1.
Otology, 0.
Laryngology, 5.
Comparative Etiology of Infectious Diseases, 0.

These figures show that the great majority of students of the fourth year, although allowed within broad limits to select their own studies, have chosen general subjects rather than the highly specialized ones. Medicine and Surgery claim the greater number, and the studies next in popularity are those which will presumably aid a man who hopes to practise general Medicine or Surgery, such as Pediatrics, Orthopedics, Obstetrics, Gynæcology. The other specialties are neglected in proportion as their connection with the general subjects is remote. The laboratory courses, except Anatomy, are similarly neglected.

These facts may be interpreted as meaning either that the great majority of students intend to become general practitioners or to practise Medicine or Surgery in the broad sense, or that they are unwilling to commit themselves thus early to a specialty, and wish rather to prepare themselves on broad lines, reserving special study for post-graduate work. Thus a wisely prescribed course for the entire four years would suit the needs of most students.

THE HENRY JACKSON FUND.

Dr. Henry Jackson, '84, Instructor in Clinical Medicine, is the recipient of an unusual honor at the hands of a benefactor of the Medical School. The Hon. Robert Bacon, an intimate friend and classmate in Harvard College, has given the sum of $85,000, accompanied by the following explanatory letter:—

TO THE PRESIDENT AND FELLOWS OF HARVARD COLLEGE:

Gentlemen,—It is my wish, in adding to the funds now being raised for the benefit of the Harvard Medical School, to express not only my interest in this object, but also, and especially, my affection and esteem for my classmate and friend, Dr. Henry Jackson, of Boston, now one of its teachers.

It would give me great satisfaction to realize that this gift should serve to promote those objects in which he is directly interested and could permanently identify his name with the future of the Medical School. Knowing his interest in medical research and the advancement of medical science, and also the eminent services of his father, the late Dr. J. B. S. Jackson, to this school, especially in connection with the Anatomical Museum, it is my desire to increase my original subscription of $25,000 to the sum of $85,000, to be known as the Henry Jackson Endowment Fund. The income of this is to be used for providing a suitable annual salary for the Curator of said Museum, and for maintaining its efficiency, as an aid to medical and surgical education and research, in such manner as shall be recommended from time to time by the Faculty of the Harvard Medical School.

Very truly yours,

ROBERT BACON.

In accepting this gift, the Corporation voted—

That Mr. Bacon's generous and welcome gift be gratefully accepted on the terms stated in the foregoing letter.

Voted, That the name of John Barnard Swett Jackson, curator of the Warren Anatomical Museum from 1847 to 1879, and its first curator, be given to the curatorship.

To this generous gift will be added $15,000, which is at present available for the same purpose, making the sum of $100,000, which will provide adequately for the maintenance of the museum. It is a great pleasure to note that the name of Dr. J. B. S. Jackson, a devoted friend of the school and long one of its ablest teachers, will also be so worthily perpetuated.

THE NEW BUILDINGS OF THE MEDICAL SCHOOL.

The six months just elapsed have shown rapid progress in the construction of the new buildings. Externally they are practically completed, and the general appearance is much as it will be when entirely finished. The Administration Building is the only one which still shows the stages and scaffolding incident to exterior construction. The front is completed with the exception of the pediment surmounting the six massive marble columns, which, 6 feet in diameter and 60 feet high, form a most impressive façade. On the rear there is more work to be done, as many of the huge drums to form the corresponding columns of this side are not in place, and the pediment is not begun. The interior is all plastered, and the scaffold is being removed, and there remains to be done the putting in of the standing finish and the furnishing. Even in this rough state, the visitor cannot fail of being impressed by the beauty of the exterior of this building and by the ample proportions of its accommodations, especially those to be devoted to the Warren Museum, which will occupy the whole upper story, and with two tiers of galleries will afford ample room for a growing collection for years to come. The recent endowment of the curatorship of the museum by one of the school's most generous friends is especially welcome and opportune.

The Hygiene and Pharmacology Building is entirely completed with the exception of some few electrical connections. The fittings and furnishings are almost all in place, and are striking in their completeness and ingenuity of contrivances for convenience and comfort. The amphitheatre, with its two hundred and fifty individual seats and folding writing rests, its blackboards and stand for a projection apparatus, is ready for immediate occupancy.

The Physiology and Physiological Chemistry Building has all the interior finish in, but is not so far advanced in its furnishing, and the Bacteriology and Pathology and Anatomy and Histology Buildings are in approximately the same stage of completion. The marble terrace fronting the five buildings and surrounding the court-yard is completed even to the balustrade and to the two fountains on either side of the steps leading up to the Administration Building. The grading and laying out of the court-yard proper is being actively pushed, and this work is much favored by the mild open weather which has prevailed this winter.

Unless unforeseen delays occur, the exterior of the buildings and grounds will be quite finished by May, and it is intended to have certain entertainments incident to the annual meeting of the American Medical Association held there. The formal dedication of the buildings will probably occur in September, and they will be occupied by next year's returning classes.

A more particular description of the new home of the Harvard Medical School will appear in a later issue.

NOTES.

MEDICAL SCHOOL SCHOLARSHIPS.

The Faculty of the Medical School has announced the award of scholarships as follows: the Joseph Pearson Oliver scholarship of $325 to M. J. Shaugnessy, 3M.; the Isaac Sweetser scholarship of $250 to E. L. Booth, 2M.; the Claudius M. Jones scholarship of $250 to R. T. Congdon, 3M.; two Hilton scholarships of $225 to W. A. Sawyer, 4M., and A. T. Brant, 3M.; the Edward M. Barringer scholarship, number two, of $200 to J. C. Sharpe, 2M.; three Eveleth scholarships of $200 to C. W. Waddell, 3M., J. L. Huntington, 3M., and J. P. Leake, 3M.; the Alfred Hosmer Linder scholarship of $200 to H. Morrison, 2M.; the Edward Wigglesworth scholarship of $200 to H. S. Bernstein, 2M.; the Lucius F. Billings scholarship of $200 to D. Gregg, 3M.; the John Thomson Taylor scholarship of $200 to E. D. Bond, 2M.; the Orlando W. Doe scholarship of $100 to F. H. Allen, 3M.; the Charles Pratt Strong scholarship of $100 to A. H. Crosbie, 4M.; the two halves, of $100 each, of an anonymous gift to R. H. Goldthwaite, 4M. and R. A. Quigley, 2M., S.B.; the Cotting Gift of $125 to F. H. McCrudden, 2M., S.B.

BOSTON MEDICAL LIBRARY MEETINGS.

The Boston Medical Library meetings have been resumed. As last winter, they are to be held in conjunction with the Suffolk District Branch of the Massachusetts Medical Society, at the Medical Library, on the Fenway, at 8.15 P.M. Light refreshments will be served at the end of each meeting. Twelve meetings have been planned. The following is the program:—

October 28. Semi-annual Meeting of the Suffolk District Branch of Massachusetts Medical Society. The Committee on Tuberculosis made

- a report on progress through Dr. Henry Jackson. The Treatment of Surgical Tuberculosis in Children, by Dr. Edward H. Bradford. The Duty of the City toward Tuberculosis, by Prof. William T. Councilman. The Home Sanitarium Treatment of Tuberculosis, by Dr. Joseph H. Pratt.
- November 15. Moving Pictures, showing Gaits, Spasms, and Convulsions. Dr. Walter B. Chase, Brookline. Demonstrations with the Reflectoscope.
- December 6. Surgical meeting. Subject of meeting not announced.
- December 20. The Milk Supply of Large Cities. The program for this meeting was arranged by Dr. Charles Harrington, chairman of the Massachusetts State Board of Health, who invited speakers from other cities.
- January 3. Recent Advances in Physiology bearing on Clinical Medicine. Professor William T. Porter, Professor Walter B. Cannon, Professor Howell, of Johns Hopkins.
- January 24. Surgery of the Peripheral Nerves. Dr. John B. Murphy, Chicago.
- February 14. The Military Hygiene of the Japanese Army. Captain Charles Lynch, United States Army.
- February 28. Secret Nostrums. Dr. Frank Billings, Chicago.
- March 14. Surgical Meeting. Subject to be selected by Dr. Joseph A. Blake, New York.
- March 28. The Treatment of Heart Disease:—
- (a) The Use of Depletion. Dr. Frederick C. Shattuck.
 - (b) The Use and Abuse of Digitalis. Dr. Franz Pfaff.
 - (c) Pneumatic Differentiation. Dr. Charles E. Quimby, New York.
 - (d) The Nauheim Treatment. Dr. Francis B. Kinnicut, New York.
- April 11. Pyloro-plasty and Gastro-enterostomy. Dr. J. N. T. Finney, Baltimore.
- April 28. Semi-annual Meeting of the Suffolk District Branch of Massachusetts Medical Society. Paper by Dr. Guy G. Fernald, Waverley, of the Massachusetts School for Feeble-minded.

A more detailed notice of each meeting will be given in the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal. Those who wish a special notification of each meeting by postal card will please notify Dr. Edwin H. Brigham at the Library.

PERSONALS.

ALABAMA.

One of the pleasant features of the recent trip of President Theodore Roosevelt through the Southern States of the Union was the greeting he received from the Harvard Club of Alabama. It is a cause for regret that the graduates and students of the University who live in the South are very few compared with the number before the Civil War, but those who live south of Mason and Dixon's line are as enthusiastic as they ever were, and there are reasons for believing that in the next few years the South will have a larger representation at Harvard.

ARIZONA.

Dr. J. W. Dudley (1891), of Tucson, has left Arizona for the winter, and is at present at Sierra Madre, Cal. He is, therefore, unable to continue as an active correspondent of the Bulletin.

CALIFORNIA.

PARADISE.

Dr. James Venables (1867), formerly of Halifax, N.S., is pleasantly situated here. Address, Paradise, Butte County, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Dr. Frank R. Dray (1898) has been appointed assistant professor of medicine at the San Francisco Polyclinic, post-graduate department of the University of California. Dr. Dray has just recovered from an attack of typhoid fever.

Dr. Manak Bamii, 1900, has come to San Francisco with a view of settling here.

ILLINOIS.

SPRINGFIELD.

Dr. T. Lyman Perkins (1880) has opened an office at 512 East Capitol Avenue. Hours, 2-5, 7-8.

KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE.

The following letter is self-explanatory:—

LOUISVILLE, KY., Nov. 4, 1905.

DR. DAVID CHEEVER,
557 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

My dear Dr. Cheever,—I am very sorry to be compelled to send my regrets for the dinner of Dr. Folsom to the Council of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association on the evening of November 9.

While I appreciate the fact that this letter should only contain my regrets, I notwithstanding take advantage of the opportunity to express my grateful acceptance of the honor done me some two and one-half years ago,—my election as Vice-President to the Harvard Medical Alumni Association.

You might think that I have been somewhat tardy in this respect, and I am afraid that I have been.

Late in June of 1903 a despatch from Boston appeared in the columns of the Louisville Courier-Journal to the effect that Dr. I. N. Bloom, of Louisville, had been elected Vice-President of Harvard University.

I am a modest man, and, while I did not know that such an office existed, I thought that possibly it had been newly created, with the object of getting a good man to fill the position.

Having had some experience in that New England exclusiveness which believes in taking all that there is to take and leaving the rest for the others, I was somewhat surprised that the office should seek the man so far from the Hub of the Universe.

I have said that I am a modest man.

My friends congratulated me, and it was not long before I received inquiries from them as to who was President of "Harvard College," how old a man he was, and what was his insurance expectancy of life, and about how much he was paid to act as President. I answered as many of these questions as I could, and gave a snap diagnosis of those that I could not.

I believe that I even went so far as to answer affirmatively the question as to whether I would be willing to leave this State, where my family had lived considerably more than half a century, and settle down with the Yankees.

A few weeks after the newspaper's announcement I received a formal notice that I had been elected one of a number of Vice-Presidents of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association.

Last May the Western Association of Harvard Alumni Clubs met in Louisville, and the people of this good old town had the opportunity of seeing and hearing President Eliot of Harvard. Many of my friends were disappointed at seeing such a robust, healthy, jolly, yet dignified-looking gentleman; but, after they heard him speak at the Woman's Club, and again at the banquet, I think they were satisfied that the University was in good hands, and even hoped that, whoever his successor might be, many years might elapse before he could take office.

I received several requests from the editors of the Journal to write and give such information as I could concerning the whereabouts of the Medical Alumni graduates in Kentucky. Some years ago I found that there were three, and recently I have sought to inform myself about them. I find that one has been translated, the second has moved away, and with the third I am not on speaking terms. If any others have come to this State, I know nothing of it or their light has been hidden behind bushels of medical colleges and universities with which our State abounds.

I have received a notice that I am indebted to the Medical Alumni Association to the extent of $4; but perhaps I had better write a separate letter about this on some future occasion.

Please present my compliments to our President, Dr. Folsom, and the Council of the Harvard Medical Association, and believe me,

Very sincerely yours,

I. N. BLOOM.

MARYLAND.

BALTIMORE.

Dr. Henry Barton Jacobs (1887) has been abroad since May. He was appointed by the United States government one of the delegates to the International Tuberculosis Congress at Paris, with Dr. S. A. Knopf, of New York, and Dr. L. F. Flick, of Philadelphia.

The one hundred and seventh semi-annual meeting of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of Maryland was held at Deer Park, September 21 and 22. Dr. W. S. Thayer (1889) delivered an address on "Some Public Duties of the Physician." Dr. Harvey W. Cushing (1895) spoke of "Palliative Operations in Intracerebral Tumors."

Dr. W. S. Thayer (1889) has been appointed professor of clinical medicine in the Johns Hopkins University. He delivered an address on "The Problems of Internal Medicine" before the Section for Internal Medicine at the Congress of Arts and Sciences in St. Louis in 1904, also the Jerome Cochran Lecture before the Alabama State Medical Association at Mobile on April 20, 1904.

Among his other medical publications during the year have been: "The Relation of Acute Infections to Arterio-Sclerosis," Journal American Medical Association, Chicago, 1904; "Analysis of Forty-two Cases of Venous Thrombosis occurring in the Course of Typhoid Fever," Transactions Association American Physicians, 1904, also Medical News, New York, 1904.

Dr. J. M. T. Finney attended the meeting of the British Medical Association at Leicester, England, on July 24-28, where he presented by invitation a paper on the subject of Gastro-enterostomy and Pyloro-plasty.

MASSACHUSETTS.

BARNSTABLE.

Dr. Louis Edmonds (1893) has been placed in charge of the leprosarium on Penikese Island as an expert on leprosy. The five cases now under restraint in this Commonwealth are all imported,—two Portuguese men, one Portuguese woman, and two Chinamen. Massachusetts, after a vain search for quarters at some established institution, purchased Penikese Island for $25,000.

BOSTON.

Dr. John Phillips Reynolds (1852) has resigned from the staff of the Free Hospital for Women, Brookline, after a service of twenty-nine years.

Dr. Samuel H. Durgin (1864) spoke on "The Work of the Boston Board of Health in School Inspection" before the Third Massachusetts State Conference of Charities, held here November 8.

Dr. Henry O. Marcy (1864), of 180 Commonwealth Avenue, has returned from his long trip in Alaska. Dr. Marcy was delegated the honor of giving the memorial address in commemoration of the late Dr. Nathan S. Davis, of Chicago, founder of the American Medical Association, at the recent meeting of the American Medical Association in Portland, Ore.

Dr. J. Collins Warren (1866) and Dr. Maurice H. Richardson (1877) have returned from a short trip abroad. They both attended the Congress of Physicians convened in Brussels.

Dr. Thomas Dwight (1867) has been chosen president of the Catholic Alumni of Harvard University.

Dr. Henry P. Bowditch (1868), of the Harvard Medical School, has been granted a leave of absence, and will spend the time abroad.

Dr. John H. McCollom (1869), of the Boston City Hospital, read a paper on the "Duties and Responsibilities of City Physicians" at the October meeting of the Massachusetts Association of City Physicians.

Dr. J. W. Farlow (1877) wishes to announce to his patients and professional friends that after Dec. 1, 1905, his office hours will be from 11 A.M. to 1 P.M. instead of in the afternoon, as heretofore. Patients can be seen at other hours by appointment. 234 Clarendon Street, Boston.

Dr. James J. Minot (1878) has been elected librarian of the Treadwell Library at the Massachusetts General Hospital in place of Dr. A. T. Cabot (1876), resigned.

Dr. Charles Harrington (1881), secretary of the State Board of Health, has sailed for Europe. He will present at the International Dairy Conference in Paris the work which has been done by the board along those lines.

Dr. Robert W. Lovett (1885) read by invitation a paper entitled "The Mechanism of the Normal Spine and its Relation to Scoliosis" before the Congress of the German Orthopedic Association in Berlin, April 25, 1905.

Dr. C. H. Hare (1889) has removed his office to "The Cambridge," 483 Beacon Street, Suite 41. Office hours, 2-3.

Dr. Arthur C. Jelly (1891) has removed to 10 Arlington Street. Office hours, 2.30-4.

Dr. John Bapst Blake (1891) announces the birth of a son.

Dr. E. W. Taylor (1891) has removed to 457 Marlborough Street.

Dr. Arthur H. Wentworth (1891) has removed to 352 Marlborough Street.

Dr. William Cogswell (1894) and Miss Miriam Gratz Clay were married Oct. 10, 1905, in Lexington, Ky. Mrs. Cogswell is a great-grand-daughter of Henry Clay. Her great-aunt, Rebecca Gratz, was the heroine in Scott's "Ivanhoe."

Dr. Arthur W. Fairbanks (1894) has removed to 591 Beacon Street.

Dr. Timothy J. Reardon (1894) has been appointed a trustee of the Boston City Hospital. The position is an unsalaried one.

Dr. John J. Dowling (1894) and Miss Marcie Pugh were married Oct. 4, 1905. After an extended tour of the South they will reside at 652 Massachusetts Avenue.

Dr. Franklin W. White (1895) returned from Europe October 2.

Dr. Frederick S. Burns (1898) and Miss Josephine Lyman Boynton, of Newport, R.I., were married Sept. 27, 1905. After a trip to Canada Dr. and Mrs. Burns will live at 164 St. Botolph Street.

Dr. George B. Magrath (1898) has been sent as an expert by the State Board of Health to learn the source of the epidemic of typhoid fever in Springfield. His investigations show it to be probable that the street vendors and push-cart peddlers of fruit, vegetables, and other food materials are responsible for the spread of the disease. The earliest cases occurred in their families, and the local board of health has found a most unsanitary condition on the two streets where most of them live.

Dr. Ernest De W. Wales (1899) has removed to 282 Berkeley Street, corner of Commonwealth Avenue. Office hours, 2-4.

Dr. Wilder Tileston (1899) and Dr. Edwin Allen Locke (1901) have removed to 117 Beacon Street. Office hours, 2-3.

Dr. Chauncy W. Norton (1900) has resigned as assistant in anatomy at the Harvard Medical School.

Dr. Henry Marshall Swift (1900) has removed for a time to Berlin, Germany. Address, Care of Baring Brothers, London, England.

Selection of Dr. Walter Remsen Brinckerhoff (1901), of the Harvard Medical School, for appointment as pathologist in charge of the new hospital and laboratory for the study of leprosy, which is to be established by the government on the island of Molokai of the Hawaiian group, is viewed by physicians as the greatest opportunity for original work that has fallen to one of their profession in many years. No American pathologist has had the advantage of the study of leprosy in the Hawaiian Islands under conditions to be provided by the government.

Under the direction of this young Harvard man the government is to make a scientific investigation of this disease, with a purpose to ascertain the cause of leprosy and to determine if it is possible to effect a cure. This investigation is, perhaps, the most important medical inquiry which the Administration has undertaken in the insular possessions. Dr. Brinckerhoff's opportunities are, therefore, full of great possibilities, but the task he is to undertake is equally arduous and hazardous.

Although his appointment has not been officially announced from Washington, it is known here that Dr. Brinckerhoff has been selected, that the place has been offered him, and that he has accepted. His appointment will doubtless be officially announced soon, together with the plans the government has made for the hospital on the island of Molokai. Those who have been associated with Dr. Brinckerhoff at the Harvard Medical School and the Boston City Hospital assert that he is the most competent man they know of who could have been selected for this difficult and responsible task. Young, patient, persistent, enthusiastic, he is described as a born investigator, to whom his profession represents all ambitions, hopes, and desires.

Dr. Brinckerhoff was born in New York July 4, 1874, the son of P. Remsen Brinckerhoff, and was educated in private schools in New York City, and in Chicago prepared for Harvard, which he entered with the class of 1897, being a student at the Lawrence Scientific School. He was an athlete in college, and was a member of the Harvard Cycle Association. He received his degree of M.D. from the Harvard Medical School in 1901, and began his hospital service at the Boston City Hospital, where he was a house officer, then second and first assistant in the pathological laboratory. Upon completing his service at the hospital, Dr. Brinckerhoff went to the Harvard Medical School as an assistant to Dr. William T. Councilman, head of the department of pathology. From 1903 to 1905 he held the place of assistant, and last year was made an instructor. He has given much time to the study of the causes and cure of small-pox, and in January, 1904, when further investigation of small-pox was decided upon by the Harvard Medical School, Dr. Brinckerhoff was sent to Manila. He remained there more than a year, gathering material from observation, autopsies, and investigations in the pathological laboratory of the Marine Hospital. He returned to Boston last June, and resumed his position in the pathological department of the Harvard Medical School.

Drs. Malcolm Dean Miller (1905) and George Hopkinson (1905) share an office at 329 Massachusetts Avenue.

Dr. Henry I. Bowditch (1902) has removed to 70 Bay State Road. Office hours, 2-3.

The engagement is announced of Dr. John A. C. McLean (1904) and Miss Beulah C. Chaffee. Dr. MacLean has just returned from a year's study abroad.

Dr. James D. Barney (1904) and Miss Margaret Waldo Higginson, daughter of Colonel Thomas Wentworth Higginson, of Cambridge, were married at Dublin, N.H., on September 2. Dr. and Mrs. Barney live at 9 Beacon Street.

HOLYOKE.

Dr. Charles H. Turner (1898) has returned from England, and will locate in Haverhill.

LAWRENCE.

Dr. Charles G. Carleton (1867) is a consulting physician to Danvers Insane Hospital.

Drs. Octavius T. Howe (1877) and George W. Dow (1881) have removed their offices to Rooms 608-09-10, Bay State Building.

Drs. Frank B. Flanders (1878) and Arthur H. Cutter (1901) have returned from a vacation spent in Canada.

Dr. John J. O'Sullivan (1896) has resumed practice after a two months' trip abroad. He was accompanied by Dr. Thomas J. Shanahan (1896), of Brookline.

Dr. J. Joseph Bartley (1901) has received the appointment of local medical examiner for the Columbian National Life Insurance Company of Boston.

Dr. Gustave E. Kurth (1901) has purchased a Knox automobile.

Dr. J. Forrest Burnham (1901) has returned from a vacation trip to New York. While there, he was pleasantly entertained at the homes of Drs. Frank E. Knight (1901), 2064 Fifth Avenue, and Philip W. T. Moxam (1901), Ditmas Avenue, Brooklyn.

Dr. John B. Bain (1902) has been visiting in New York.

SALEM.

Dr. John H. O'Shea (1905) has been appointed house surgeon to the Boston City Hospital.

WEST NEWTON.

Dr. Robert Burns (1879) has opened an office at 100 Valentine Street.

192 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

WOBURN.

Dr. Charles T. O'Brien (1902) has been appointed a member of the new board of health. Dr. O'Brien has opened an office at 20 Church Avenue, after spending nearly two years in the service of St. Vincent's Hospital, Worcester.

OBITUARY.

1855. Dr. Augustus Choate Hamlin, one of the best-known men in Maine, died Nov. 18, 1905, at the age of seventy-six years.

He was widely known as an author, artist, and as an authority on tourmalines, of which he is said to have owned the best collection in existence. He was a nephew of Hannibal Hamlin, Vice-President of the United States during the Civil War.

Augustus Choate Hamlin was born in Columbia, Me., Aug. 28, 1829, and was the son of Elijah Livermore Hamlin. He was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1851 and from Harvard Medical School in 1855.

He was attached to the Second Maine Infantry as assistant surgeon in 1861, and was made brigade surgeon in the following year, attaining the rank of lieutenant-colonel and medical inspector of the United States army in 1863. He served during several battles.

After the war he practised medicine in Bangor. In 1878 he was made chevalier of the order of St. Anne by the Emperor of Russia.

Dr. Hamlin was the Maine commissioner at the Yorktown centennial in 1881. In 1882-86 he was surgeon-general of Maine. He had been mayor of Bangor twice, and was department commander of the Grand Army in this State.

He was the author of a book on Andersonville prison and of numerous other works, many of them of a scientific nature.

In 1857 he was married to Helen A. Cutting.

Mrs. Hamlin died about four years ago. Dr. Hamlin's only descendant living is a grand-daughter, Mrs. Eleanor Hamlin, of Boston. Attorney-general Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, is a cousin.

1856. Dr. George S. Hyde died at his home, 72 West Newton Street, Boston, Dec. 11, 1905. Dr. Hyde had been a practising physician in this city for half a century, occupying the house, 72 West Newton Street, South End, for the last thirty-eight years. As a boy, he attended the old Franklin School, and, on his finishing his studies there, he was presented with one of the famous Franklin medals. He took the complete course, which then occupied five years, at the Boston Latin School, and in 1849 entered Harvard University. He was graduated in 1853, receiving the degree of A.B. President Eliot was a member of his class, and he and Dr. Hyde were always friends. Dr. Hyde was later graduated from the Harvard Medical School with honors, and then received an appointment as one of the student physicians at the Massachusetts General Hospital, where he lived for the next year, devoting his attention closely to his studies. Dr. Hyde had for forty years been employed by St. Vincent's Orphan Asylum as its physician, and was dearly loved by those in charge. He was deeply interested in charitable work, especially that of the Salvation Army, Boston Industrial Mission, North End Mission, and the Board of Charities. Frequently he gave his services free to deserving patients, and in not a few cases furnished them with whatever medicines they needed without expense. Dr. Hyde was a member of the Harvard, Suffolk, Massachusetts, and American Medical Societies, and made it a point always to attend their meetings, whenever possible. He also belonged to the Boston Latin School Association. Dr. Hyde was affiliated with the Unitarian denomination.

1860. Dr. George N. Munsell, of Harwich, Mass., a Civil War veteran and one of Cape Cod's best-known physicians, died Nov. 1, 1905, in his seventieth year, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. C. W. Megathlin, in Hyannis, with whom he had been living about a month, since the death of his wife recently. Dr. Munsell has been in feeble health several years.

Dr. Munsell was born at Burlington, Dec. 14, 1835, educated at Hampden and Belfast Academies, and graduated from Harvard Medical School in 1860.

He entered the army as first assistant surgeon of the Thirty-fifth Massachusetts Volunteers, and was operating surgeon in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, and Fredericksburg.

Resigning his commission on account of ill-health, he practised successfully in this vicinity, where he was highly esteemed, and was honored by his fellow-citizens with many public offices, having represented the district in the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1890, being clerk of the Committee on Charitable Institutions.

He also served as school committee-man thirty-seven years and medical examiner of Barnstable County twenty-five years. He was president of the County Medical Society, vice-president of the State Society, president of the Pension Examining Board, acting operating surgeon of the United States Marine Hospital Service, commander of F. D. Hammond Post, G. A. R., six years, and attended national encampments from Maine to California.

Dr. Munsell was always in active demand as a speaker on all public occasions, his affability making him a favorite with children as well as older people.

He was a member of Mt. Horeb Lodge of Masons and Exchange Lodge of Odd Fellows, having held offices in both orders.

1866. Dr. John G. Park, member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, acting assistant surgeon in the navy during the Civil War, superintendent of the Worcester City Hospital in 1871, from 1872 to 1877 assistant superintendent of the State Insane Hospital, from 1877 to 1879 on the staff of the Hospital for the Chronic Insane, and from 1879 to 1890 superintendent of the Worcester Insane Hospital, and thereafter a citizen of Groton, Mass. Died in the Worcester City Hospital after an operation for gall-stones, August 29, aged sixty-seven.

1870. Dr. Alexandre Pierre Landry, one of the oldest and best-known physicians of Yarmouth County, Nova Scotia, died at his home at Eel Brook, Nov. 6, 1905.

Dr. Landry was a native of New Brunswick, but came to Nova Scotia in early life, practising first in Clare, but for many years residing at Eel Brook. He built up an extensive practice, covering the territory for many miles in every direction from his home.

He was a graduate of Harvard Medical School, 1870. He was a prominent Conservative, and was an unsuccessful candidate in that interest for the Local House in December, 1890, being defeated by Mr. Forman Hatfield. He was seventy-one years of age, and leaves a widow, three sons, and three daughters.

Dr. Landry had been in failing health for some time, but not until six weeks ago was so ill as to have to keep to his bed. By his death the medical fraternity have lost a valuable and highly esteemed member, and the community an upright and honorable resident.

1871. Dr. James Read Chadwick. See page 147.

1878. Dr. Frederick Arnold Smith died at Belhart, Tex., Sept. 26, 1905, from tuberculosis. He was born in Hartford, Conn., fifty years ago, but, when about eight years old, his parents removed from Hartford to Springfield, and, after being graduated at the Wilbraham Academy, he went to the Harvard Medical School. Upon his graduation there he pursued post-graduate work in Heidelberg, Berlin, and Vienna. Upon the completion of his studies he practised for many years in Boston, and then for a time abandoned his practice on account of his health, resuming his profession for about a year in Hartford, Conn. He afterward came to this city, and began practising here again, but about five years ago his health became so bad that he was compelled to give up active life altogether, and since that time he has been spending most of his time in Florida.

1879. Lieutenant-Colonel Cyrus Traty Peckham, Marine Surgeon, in charge of the District of Buffalo, died at his apartments in the Markeen, Dec. 10, 1905. Colonel Peckham died from a hemorrhage with which he was attacked while on his way home on a street-car on December 8.

Colonel Peckham's life has been interesting. Twice he was at the point of death as a result of his labors as a member of the United States Marine Hospital Service.

198 HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

Colonel Peckham was born in Ledyard, Conn., on Nov. 11, 1853. His father was a Baptist minister. His mother was a Miss Gates, a sister of Isaac N. Gates, who during the life of H. E. Huntington, president of the Southern Pacific Railroad, was his private secretary, and since has been the manager of the Huntington millions. The younger Peckham was educated in Ledyard, and later sent to Harvard, where he was graduated in 1876. Among his classmates were William H. Moody, now the Attorney-General of the United States, and John B. Olmsted, of Buffalo. After his graduation Colonel Peckham took up the study of medicine in the same school. He was graduated, and was offered an appointment in the marine hospital service. More for the experience it afforded, he accepted. Once in, he remained, and now has died in the service.

The Colonel's first notable service was during the period that malaria got a strong hold in the South. That was more than a score of years ago. There was what was known as the malarial district, and the colonel was sent there. He contracted chronic malaria, and was finally relieved from duty. His strength was so depleted that for a time it was believed he would die, but he recovered his strength, and was sent to a Northern station.

After the Galveston flood the Colonel was sent there. He was placed in charge of the district, and the result was that the marine hospital service was the first to have hospital tents in the flooded district. The Colonel worked there day and night, but his strength was not equal to the task, and he was brought North again, supposedly to die. Again he recovered. He was for a time in charge of the Pittsburg district. Later he was sent to New York as an expert on trachoma diseases. Colonel Peckham was sent to take charge of the Buffalo district on May 11, 1903, succeeding Dr. Wasdin.

The Colonel is survived by his wife, a daughter Grace, and a sister, Mrs. Thomas P. Norman, of Ledyard.

1881. Dr. Edward F. Galligan, of Taunton, died Sept. 26, 1905. He was born in Taunton nearly forty-nine years ago. He was graduated at the Cohannet Grammar and the high school, and later at the Harvard Medical School in the early eighties. In 1884 he was appointed city physician, and filled the position for several years. He was a prominent member of St. Mary's Parish, and was one of the charter members of the Taunton Council, Knights of Columbus, a trustee of the Morton Hospital, a member of the Taunton Physicians' Club, of the North Bristol Medical Society, and of the American Medical Association. For years he was also a member of the Clover Club of Boston. For a long period, and up to the time of his death he was a member of the Board of Pension Examiners for the district, and was interested in several local manufactories.

1903. Dr. E. W. Shead, who went to Seattle from Boston last fall, was killed by an accidental fall from the roof of the Madison Hotel at 122

Madison Street, Aug. 20, 1905. It is presumed the doctor went to the roof of the hotel to smoke, and lost his footing in attempting to step on to an adjoining building.

Dr. Shead was well known in Cambridge and Boston, where he lived for a number of years. He was a native of Eastport, Me., and the son of Edward E. Shead, one of the most prominent business men in Washington County.

Dr. Shead was only thirty-two years of age, and was unmarried. Both in Eastport and at college he was regarded as a very able man. He was graduated from Brown University with honors in 1899, and entered the Harvard Medical School, from which he was graduated in 1903. He served for a time on the force of the Boston City Hospital, and later was house officer in the Cambridge City Hospital for one year. Thence he went to New York for further hospital work. A year ago he located in Seattle, where he was making rapid progress in his profession, having established a large practice.

1903. Dr. Frank H. Hopkins, of 399A West Broadway, died Nov. 17, 1905, at Antrim, N.H., after a long illness. He went to Antrim early last summer, and for a time improved; but several weeks ago he began to fail.

Dr. Hopkins was born in South Boston, and lived his entire life there. He attended the public schools there, and received his degree from the Harvard Medical School in 1903. He was a member of the Harvard Medical Society and of the Holy Name Club. He was a brother of Edward J. Hopkins, the athlete.

ERRATA.

The following notices which recently appeared in the Bulletin have been found to be erroneous:—

"Dr. James Lloyd Wellington died at Middlebury, Vt., Aug. 18, 1903, aged eighty-six years," Quarterly No. 12, April, 1904; and "Dr. Herbert Smith died at Burin, N.S., July, 1905," Bulletin, [N.S.] No. 2, July, 1905.

In the Bulletin [N.S.] No. 2, July, 1905, the "Apographum" appearing on page 127 is, by mistake, credited to Witowski et Gorecki. The epitaph is to be found in the collected writings of Jo. Benedictus Sinibaldus (b. 1594, d. 1658), published in Francofurti, 1669, Appendix IV., page 15. This correction seems necessary, as the book is a rare one, and accurate reference is desirable. The original work may be consulted in the Boston Medical Library.

The TRIENNIAL CATALOGUE OF THE
Harvard Medical Alumni Association.

AUGUST, 1906. NEW SERIES, No. 4.

EDITED BY DAVID CHEEVER, M.D., SECRETARY.

BOSTON : PUBLISHED BY THE ASSOCIATION
1906.

ARTICLE IV.

The officers of the Association shall be a President, ten Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, and a Council of fifteen members. The President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members of the Council.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. The President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be elected for the term of three years.

SECT. 2. The members of the Council, not members ex-officio, shall be elected in classes as follows: at the first meeting of the Association, three members of the Council shall be elected for the term of four years, three members for the term of three years, three members for the term of two years, and three members for the term of one year; and thereafter, at the annual meeting of the Association in each year, three members shall be elected for the full term of four years, to fill the places of those whose term of office shall then have expired.

SECT. 3. Vacancies occurring in any of the offices before the expiration of the respective terms shall be filled at the annual meeting next following the occurrence of such vacancies. The Council shall have the power to fill a vacancy in the offices of Secretary or Treasurer for the remainder of the current year.

SECT. 4. All officers of the Association shall hold their respective offices during the regular term thereof, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

ARTICLE VI.

The annual meeting of the Association shall be held at Boston, Massachusetts, on the Tuesday preceding the annual Commencement of Harvard College; provided, however, that the Council shall have the power to appoint in any year a different time and place for the annual meeting, if deemed expedient.

ARTICLE VII.

The President or the Council shall have the power to call a special meeting of the Association at any time, provided that at least two weeks' previous notice be given to all members of the Association.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. The executive power of the Association shall be vested in the Council, subject to the control and direction of the Association.

SECT. 2. The Council shall have the power to elect from its own members an Executive Committee of not less than three members, to whom may be delegated such powers as the Council shall deem expedient.

SECT. 3. The Council shall elect every year from its own members or from the Association a "Committee on the Harvard Medical School," and may elect such other committees from its own members or the Association at large as it shall, from time to time, deem expedient to carry out the objects of the Association.

SECT. 4. The Council shall have the power to appoint, from time to time, one or more Corresponding Secretaries in the different cities or towns of the United States and the British North American provinces. It shall be the duty and office of such Corresponding Secretaries to promote in their respective localities the objects and interests of the Association.

SECT. 5. The Council shall have the power to fix the number of members of the Association necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of any and all business save that of amending the Constitution, and to fix also the number of their own members necessary to constitute a quorum of the Council.

ARTICLE IX.

The Secretary, Treasurer, the Council, and the Committee on the Harvard Medical School shall make and submit to the Association, at its annual meeting in each year, reports in writing or print of their respective doings for the preceding year.

ARTICLE X.

This Constitution may be amended by a majority vote of all the members of the Association present at the annual meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, notice of such amendment having been given in the call for the meeting.

THE SCHOOL YEAR.

The most important event in the history of the Harvard Medical School since its foundation occurred during the current year,—the removal of the School from the building on Boylston Street, Boston, which it had occupied for the past twenty-three years, to the superb new buildings on Longwood Avenue. Here were held on Tuesday, September 25, 1906, in the great quadrangle the impressive dedicatory exercises. President Eliot received the keys from Mr. Charles A. Coolidge representing the architects, and accepted them in the name of the President and Fellows of Harvard College. Professor J. Collins Warren gave an address on "The Enlarged Foundation." The Dean, Professor William L. Richardson, spoke for the Faculty of Medicine, and Professors Thomas Dwight and Frederick C. Shattuck for "The Laboratories" and for "The Clinics," respectively. The President then pronounced the words of dedication as follows:—

"I devote these buildings and their successors in coming time to the teaching of the medical and surgical arts which combat disease and death, alleviate injuries, and defend and assure private and public health; and to the pursuit of the biological and medical sciences, on which depends all progress in the medical and surgical arts and in preventive medicine. I solemnly dedicate them to the service of individual man and of human society, and invoke upon them the favor of men and the blessing of God."

On the next day, Wednesday, September 26, the academic exercises were held in Sanders Theatre. Procession was formed as on Commencement Day. The Chief Marshal, preceded by the band, escorted the President of the University, and was followed by the governing boards, his Excellency the Governor, other State and municipal officials, benefactors, delegates from other institutions of learning, members of the University Faculties, and nearly one thousand of the Alumni of the Medical School, who filled the gallery of Sanders Theatre and occupied the available standing room. Memorable addresses were given by President Eliot on "The Future of Medicine," and by Professor William H. Welch of Johns Hopkins University on "The Unity of the Medical Sciences," and ten honorary degrees were conferred by the President, as follows:—

HONORARY DOCTOR OF ARTS.

Charles Allerton Coolidge, architect; designer of admirable buildings for academic and scientific uses in California, Illinois, New York, and Massachusetts; designer of the monumental new buildings of the Harvard Medical School,—buildings in which are combined spaciousness, splendor of material, fine grouping, durability, and careful adaptation to their special uses. Through professional skill and patience an influential promoter of the purposes ~~and~~ wishes of the Medical Faculty.

HONORARY DOCTOR OF SCIENCE.

Simon Flexner, born and brought up to the standing of a physician at Louisville, Ky.; trained as a student and professor of pathology chiefly at the Johns Hopkins University; productive investigator and author in bacteriology and pathology; since 1904 Director of the Laboratories of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, and there the competent master of great resources for the immediate and constant advancement of Medical Science; and DOCTORS OF LAWS.

John Collins Warren, Instructor and Professor of Surgery in Harvard University for thirty-five years; author and eminent practitioner in surgery; the enthusiastic, winning, and indefatigable promoter of the great undertaking of the Medical School, who knew how to inspire others with his own well-grounded hopefulness and ardor.

Henry Pickering Bowditch, for thirty-five years chief teacher of physiology in Harvard University; for ten years Dean of the Medical School; investigator, as well as teacher and administrator; whose imagination conceived, whose faith foresaw, the new Medical School, and who contributed to the realization of his vision by diligent labor in the cause and through the confidence which others felt in his foresight and sagacity.

José Ramos, Professor of Pathology and Chief of the Clinical Staff in the Medical School of Mexico; officer of the Medical Institute of Mexico, senator from the State of San Luis Potosi, in whose welcome presence Harvard University gladly remembers that the University of Mexico was her elder sister on the American continent.

Franz Keibel, Professor of Anatomy in the University of Freiburg; eminent investigator in anatomy and embryology; worthy representative of German genius for medical research and teaching

Charles Scott Sherrington, Lecturer and Professor at the University of London, St. Thomas's Hospital, and the University of Liverpool; distinguished experimental physiologist, and especially neurologist; public-spirited and active member of famous scientific societies and serviceable medical organizations.

Francis John Shepherd, Professor of Anatomy in McGill University; Canadian by birth, education, and service; distinguished surgeon; active contributor to professional literature; ready sharer in the public functions of the profession and in its works of charity and good will.

Sir Thomas Barlow, Professor of Clinical Medicine; physician to his Majesty's household and to University College Hospital; eminent general practitioner and consultant.

Abraham Jacobi, a medical graduate of Bonn University in 1851 and a practising physician in New York since 1853; professor of the diseases of children since 1860; officer in many hospitals and medical societies; productive author; alert, energetic, progressive practitioner; honored medical veteran.

At the close of the accademic session, after a brief interval during which the guests of the University were received by President Eliot in Phillips Brooks House, the Harvard Medical Alumni Association took charge of the celebration. Procession was again formed in the yard, and the Alumni, under the leadership of their Chief Marshal, Dr. Henry Jackson, escorted the President and the invited guests of the University to Memorial Hall, and entertained them at the Triennial Dinner. Nearly eight hundred men were present. President Eliot says in his annual report:—

“The whole of the second day’s celebration emphasized the close university connection of the Medical School,—a connection which has been of high value to both the School and the University for thirty-five years past. Both of the public ceremonies and the gathering of the Medical Alumni were dignified, and adorned by noble music, admirably rendered by a chorus mainly composed of graduates of the Medical School.”

The formal addresses and proceedings of the celebration have appeared in university publications and the public prints. We print on a later page the speeches made at the Triennial Dinner.

The current year has been one of adjustments and accommodation to new conditions, but, on the whole, one of progress in every direction. Two resignations from the Faculty have been accepted by the President and Fellows: those of Professor William L. Richardson as Dean and of Professor J. Collins Warren as Mosely Professor of Surgery. The vacancies thus created have not yet been filled. Other changes of the greatest importance are impending. We shall reserve for a later issue of the Bulletin a review of the year just closing, of present conditions, and of the changes promised in the near future.

The Association is endeavoring to be of practical and material aid to its Alma Mater by raising money among its members and the Alumni at large, to be devoted to the creation of a Harvard Medical Alumni Fund and to the payment of a yearly sum to the School to increase the efficiency of the teaching. On a later page will be found an account of this undertaking, rendered by the treasurer of the fund, Dr. Malcolm Storer ('89). The Dean in his annual report says:—

“The Harvard Medical Alumni Association has shown its interest in the School in a most welcome and practical manner by the creation of an Alumni Fund. Twelve hundred dollars has been received for expenditure during the current year.

In accordance with the wishes of the Association this sum has been utilized in the payment of salaries to a few instructors and assistants, who will devote the whole or a large part of their time to teaching. The students will at once receive the advantages of this fund by the better instruction which is thus afforded."

We understand that eighteen of the younger teachers who have shown conspicuous ability and devotion to their work have been materially benefited by our efforts. The treasurer of the fund has just paid over fifteen hundred dollars as the second annual payment for current uses, and one thousand dollars additional to the Alumni Fund.

The annual meeting of the Association will be held on Tuesday, June 25, 1907, at 12 o'clock noon, in the Administration Building of the new Harvard Medical School. Besides the transaction of regular business an account will be given by those competent to speak of the progress of the year. After the meeting a spread will be held in the Alumni Room. It is earnestly hoped that there will be a large attendance at this first meeting in the new School.

On Commencement Day, Wednesday, June 26, the usual spread will be held in Stoughton 1, in the College Yard, for the entertainment of all graduates of the Medical School and of the graduating class.

TRIENNIAL DINNER OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

MEMORIAL HALL, SEPT. 26, 1906.

The PRESIDENT, Dr. WORCESTER.—Brother Alumni of the Harvard Medical School,—As your spokesman this afternoon, my duty would appear to be plain, for I have only to voice your thoughts and give utterance to your pent-up feelings. Fortunately for me, it requires no extraordinary power in mind-reading to discern what you would first have me say, for welling up from every heart and pushing forth on the tip of every tongue is a hearty Harvard welcome to these our distinguished guests. Some have come from the North, some from far southern countries, some from our own far West and some from across the seas. All have come to pay honor to our Alma Mater, to help her sons in this great house-warming. Thrice welcome are they!—welcome for the high personal distinction they themselves have won, welcome as representatives and messengers from our sister universities, bringing us their greetings and felicitations, welcome as witnesses of the deep, strong ties that, irrespective of state and nation, bind us together in one common brotherhood.

In visiting this morning Old Harvard Hall and Holden Chapel, the first cradles of the Medical School, one could hardly help wondering what those men who were trained there a century ago would have thought and said, could they yesterday have inspected the new buildings. And yet their amazement would have been only one degree greater than ours, for those of us who went to school on North Grove Street hardly yet have become accustomed to the spacious and elegant school on Boylston Street, and except for the hearty welcome there, and the kindly guidance of Jim Skillen, would never have found our way to the anatomical lecture-room, and except for his guidance we would have been lost in the bacteriological menagerie. It is idle to deny, in looking back to our school-days and then looking forward to the school-days of our successors in the new buildings, that we have something to envy. These comfortable chairs are very unlike the benches we sat upon, the perfect ventilation does not remind us of the air we breathed in the old North Grove Street School; but, gentlemen, we had our advantages. Every generation has its advantages as well as its disadvantages, and during the anatomical lectures that we heard I do not remember any complaints that the air was not sufficiently vivified. As lightning is supposed to give life-giving ozone to the murky atmosphere of a summer's day, so was not that heavy atmosphere of the lecture-room clarified and vivified by the flashes that came from the lips of Oliver Wendell Holmes? And, surely, it was an advantage to us, that little gateway opening through the fence leading us daily to the amphitheatre of the Massachusetts General Hospital. It was no disadvantage to us that we could there so easily see Bigelow reduce a hip dislocation or crush one of those enormous stones. There were giants in those days, and, gentlemen, if the Faculty of Medicine is able to so far surpass their material surroundings as the Faculty we sat under surpassed theirs, they will have certainly merited all the praise that can ever be given to men.

But the future of the Harvard Medical School does not depend upon the Faculty alone. No educational institution depends solely upon its Faculty. For its real success it must have also a hearty co-operation of all its Alumni, all of the graduates of the School. It is all very well enough for us here, in the enthusiasm of these days, to remind ourselves of the days that we have experienced, but there is a duty resting upon us, gentlemen, to hand on to generations following us the high traditions with which we have been blessed. To do this effectually, we must be bound together in an association. If ever the existence of the Harvard Alumni Association needed justification, I am sure this meeting to-day furnishes it. Without that Association which comprises hardly one-third of the total number of Alumni, this meeting would have been impossible, and the Alumni would have been unable to carry into action their desire to co-operate most heartily with the University in the festivities yesterday and this morning. I hope that not a single member of the Alumni present who has not joined the Association will fail to do so. And there is another chance, gentlemen, for helping on the Harvard Medical School. It is necessary for the increase of the teaching staff, in order to retain their best young teachers, for the Medical School to have more money. It surely is little enough to expect of the Alumni, when such princely gifts have been given for housing the School, that the Alumni will at least do something toward the support of the teachers there. You know how recently, how successful Bishop Lawrence was in raising a splendid endowment to increase teachers' salaries in Harvard College. We, of course, some of us, might plead that that took the wind out of our sails; but we must sail on. We must go on with the small subscription that has already been begun for the increase of teachers' salaries in the Medical School. I am able to report to you that, of the 2,900 Alumni, 180 have responded to the circular begging for aid, and have contributed $1,900. That is but a beginning, and it may seem to you discouragingly small. To some of us that seems encouragingly large, for never before has such an undertaking met with even that much success, and with the indefatigable treasurer of that committee, Dr. Malcolm Storer, still willing to receive subscriptions, I have no doubt that we shall be able to give to the Medical School not $1,900 next year, but five times that amount. If you, each one, will give but the price of one of our medical journal subscriptions toward this fund, that would amount to $15,000 a year, and that might put the Faculty, might it not, Mr. President, on their feet?

It is not only by giving money that we can help the Medical School. We can help the Medical School by giving our hearty encouragement to the teachers there. In such meetings as this we cannot only applaud those who have done well, but surely the hard-working teachers in the Faculty and in all the schools of the University, deserve and need applause just as much as crews on the river and football teams in the Stadium.

We can help, gentlemen, in a still higher way. No teaching body in a professional school can hope for highest success without the co-operation that comes from the graduates of the School in reporting to them what was of most value to them in the instruction they received, and what they would most like to have handed on to their sons. Now, gentlemen, many of us went through the Medical School before the laboratory developed. We appreciate all that modern science has done in the study of the cause and prevention of disease, but in our practice we have found other things than disease to think about. We have found patients, persons, living souls, and, while the science of medicine has so splendidly developed, has the art of practice made a corresponding betterment? If we, gentlemen, have found the necessity upon us of meeting the little ills that have no names, and are not caused so far as we can yet tell by any germs, if we have found in our practice the necessity of all of the Harvard pluck and grit that we have inherited to help us stand by the patient who is sinking down into the valley of the shadow of death, if we have found then the need of all the high inheritance we have received from Harvard, let it be not thought amiss if we suggest to the Faculty of Medicine that the art of meeting people and of taking care of patients in the little, old-fashioned, homely ways is as necessary to be taught as is the science of the causation of disease.

It is in accordance with medical etiquette that the youngest man shall speak first, but you would not pardon me longer if I should detain you. We have with us our chief of staff; and, in introducing him, may I not say that, while we all are proud and willing and ready to serve under his orders, we hope with all our hearts that the day may be long distant when he shall be obliged to serve under the orders of any one of us? Gentlemen, I give you the health of one whom we admire and one whom we love, the President of the University.

President ELIOT. Mr. President, Graduates of the Medical School,—The central thought that has been in my mind this afternoon as I have looked about this hall is the thought that this gathering and this celebration means a new sense of solidarity in the medical profession. The medical practitioner alone in his village or his ward, meeting one individual patient after the other, is a man isolated, is a man who comes to look upon his profession as a practice upon individuals, for individuals. I hope this day will open an era for the medical profession in which it shall have a high sense of its public duties beyond its duties to individual patients.

I have noticed that both yesterday and to-day a very important part of the celebration has been the musical part. I have never listened to such admirable music at any academic festival that I have attended before. That means something, gentlemen. We all observed how the chorus attacked. They went off together, in time and tune. That is exactly the way in which the medical profession should act together and work together to attack the physical evils and the moral evils which infest human society,—together in harmony, in co-operation, in united effort. Then I noticed another thing about the music yesterday and to-day. It was deeply religious,—not technically religious, expressing no dogma, no doctrine. It was praising God; it was saying, "Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty!" Now there is no profession among educated men in the world that has a greater right than the medical profession to speak the praises of God. You, gentlemen, deal with those deep emotions and deep experiences of mankind out of which have grown all religious beliefs,—all the fundamental beliefs of the human race concerning duty, truth, and love!

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose many of us at this time are wondering why a few years ago our country should have gone down into Cuba. I can tell you, gentlemen, at least two notable results of that invasion which we must admit are blessings. One has already been alluded to to-day. Except for that invasion we probably should know nothing about the prevention of yellow fever. But here in Massachusetts we have another blessing to remember. Because of his service as Inspector-General in the province of Havana, which led him to the study of the prevention of disease, we have since had for our chief magistrate one who is particularly interested in the development of preventive medicine, as well as in the medical charities. I have the pleasure of presenting to you the Governor of the Commonwealth, Curtis Guild.

The GOVERNOR. Mr. President, Graduates of the Harvard Medical School,—The leading gentleman in "Carmen," when called upon, responds to his toast with the statement that there is a similarity between the professions of the soldier and the toreador. In like fashion I might add that there is a similarity between the professions of physic and politics. Both professions antedate history, both have accomplished much for human happiness, both have served from the memory of man as the target of popular abuse, with but this difference: that, with you, ridicule is directed only in general at a profession which is said to bury all its mistakes; with us, it is directed at each individual who, as Tom Reed once said, only is admitted to have been a statesman after his own burial.

Moreover, it is your profession's happy fortune at some time to receive, at least once in his life, the homage of each one of the sons of men. Even the cynical Byron was forced to admit

"This is the way physicians mend or end us,
Secundum artem, but, although we sneer
In health, when ill we call them to attend us
Without the least propensity to jeer.
While that hiatus maxime deflendus,
To be filled up by spade or mattocks near.
Instead of gliding gracefully to Lethe,
We tease good Baillie or soft Abernethy."

In spite of the jests at the profession, whether expressed in Attic Greek, Chaucerian English, French of the Court of Le Roi Soleil, or good modern American slang, the profession has never lacked, even among the laity, supporters and defenders. A Socrates toasts Æsculapius in his death draft. A Molière prepares a burlesque ballet of quacks, whose catchy chorus, "Oh, grande puissance de l'orvietan," drives the nostrum-vender from Paris, at least for a time. A Peter Collier bravely flings overboard the most profitable line of newspaper advertising, and tears the mask from the death's head that lurks behind the patent medicine bottle. The world does move.

It is a privilege to bring, as the head of this Commonwealth, the hearty greetings of Massachusetts to one of the noblest, if not the oldest, of all professions. I believe it to be the oldest. The Innuït, the nearest living approach to primitive man, has no tribal organization, no war leader, only the shadow of religion, certainly no poetry, but he is a firm believer in his medicine man, the Angekok. There was a notable medical staff at the service of Achilles and Agamemnon, who probably in their day were buried at times under a flight of winged words if they failed to exterminate every mosquito bearing malaria and every fly laden with the germs of typhoid. Homer himself sings how Podaleirios and Machaon, the two sons of Æsculapius "Hieter' Agatho," the "good surgeons" to the Greek army, led the forces of Tricca and sundry other cities with a fleet of thirty hollow ships to the siege of Troy.

We, therefore, have the most classical precedent for the physician militant. We need not fear to boast that it was a Massachusetts surgeon whose dying words at Bunker Hill live, not as the epitaph of physical defeat, but as the pæan of moral victory; that it was a Massachusetts surgeon who led the forlorn hope at Monmouth; that it was a Massachusetts surgeon who was the last to leave the sinking "Bon Homme Richard"; and, finally, that it is a Massachusetts surgeon whose energy, courage, and marvellous administrative powers gave Cuba the only law, order, and prosperity she has ever known, and has made it impossible for both hemispheres in peace and war to forget the name of Leonard Wood.

I congratulate you on the new and noble home of this noble School, if not the oldest medical school in America, certainly the best medical school in America. What names are clustered about its history! the Warrens (oh, pater pulcher filius pulchrior!), and Jackson and Channing, Hayward and Holmes, Shattuck and Bigelow, and those who to-day are making Harvard's brilliant present outshine even her honorable past.

This dedication of these buildings makes 1906 memorable in the history of medicine in Massachusetts. Possibly it may be worth remembering that the legislators of Massachusetts, as well as the physicians, have done perhaps a little to mark this year in medical history. Until this year the care of the feeble-minded was an experiment in Massachusetts, in which the Commonwealth aided a privately endowed institution. As you know, the result has set the name of Fernald among those whose gifts to humanity can never be forgotten. I had the honor, last January, to recommend, and the General Court has approved and passed, a new statute by which the Commonwealth adopts as a permanent policy State care and education of these unfortunate little ones, which is to be extended till every feeble-minded child in the Commonwealth becomes, if not an intelligent citizen, at least a happy and as far as possible a self-supporting member of the community.

Last year, in certain localities, there was in Massachusetts medical inspection of school children. It only needed the presentation to the General Court of the terrible handicap borne by the child suffering unconsciously from physical defect of hearing, eyesight, improper diet, or inherited taint to secure from it a new law, now in force, by which every public school in this Commonwealth is now inspected by a physician, and the little sufferers treated according to their needs. The blind headaches caused by astigmatism, imperfect comprehension caused by defective hearing, inattention and absence caused by chronic indigestion of unwholesome food; and, saddest of all, the hopeless dulness of the child mind, in which, from birth, a shadowed intelligence has never by the practised hand been flung open to the sunlight of understanding,—these are to vanish from the schools of Massachusetts, that the sound brain and body of the child may later produce the sound judgment of the citizen.

The prevention of adult pauperism and insanity by permanent and progressive State care for the feeble-minded from earliest youth, the promotion of sound citizenship by the promotion of healthy childhood,—these are the two gifts with which the legislators of Massachusetts have sought to emulate in this year the erection of these splendid buildings for and by the physicians, with their no less splendid opportunities for the uplifting of health and hope and life for Harvard, for Massachusetts, for mankind.

The CHAIRMAN. Two summers ago, under a commission of the University, I was studying in England methods of caring for the sick, principally nursing schools. I had the honor of being presented at that time to the King, and I shall never forget his kindness nor my surprise in the interest he took in my mission. Among other questions, he asked why Harvard should be sending any one over to that country to study such a subject when such magnificent buildings were being given to it. I mention this, not only from personal vanity and pride, but as a striking instance of what is well known there, but not so well known in this country,—King Edward's hearty interest, not only in the preservation of universal peace, but in the alleviation of all the ills of the individual. His interest in Harvard will surely not be less that we have to-day made his family physician a Harvard doctor. In calling upon Sir Thomas Barlow, the Professor of Clinical Medicine in the University College of London, I trust he will pardon me if I couple with the wish for his health our devout wish that he and his colleagues, under the kind providence of God, may long be enabled to preserve the health of his Majesty, King Edward the Seventh.

Sir THOMAS BARLOW.—Mr. President, Gentlemen,—Within the last two days there has been going through my mind, as I doubt not through the minds of my fellow-countrymen, the old Bible story of the visit of the Queen of Sheba to see the glory of Solomon. We have heard long ago of this great seat of science and learning. We know that it has not only been a seat of science and of learning, but that it has been a great influence in national culture and in national righteousness. But as to the Queen of Sheba not half was told, so our visit here has reminded us that not half has been told to us. We knew that these were most beautiful buildings,—the fame of them had reached us at home,—but we had never dreamed to see such a vision of beauty, of charm, and of absolute adaptation to the needs for which these buildings were erected. I have been present at many an academic ceremonial, but never in my life have I seen anything approaching this in beauty and in reverence and in most perfect taste. Well, gentlemen, will you be surprised that just as with the Queen of Sheba, when she came to the close of her visit, her heart sank down within her, so to us the last and the most gracious act you have performed is to drink to the health of our King. Gentlemen, the solidarity of the English and American races does not depend upon crowned heads. If I may say so, it is one of those primeval facts, like the love of father and mother or brother and sister; and however superficial might be the differences, not unlike those of brother and sister in one family, we know, we are sure, that it would be absolutely criminal, fratricidal, that there should be any real difference between us. But let me tell you that in the whole of his vast dominions there is not one man who is more devoted to this essential union of the Anglo-Saxon people than our beloved King. As your President has told you, it is not a mere formal attachment, a mere matter of flattery, a mere matter of smooth words: he does take a real and living interest in the amelioration of the sick and those who are in trouble and sorrow, and he takes a real interest in the advance of your beloved country in civilization and in all the things that make life more beautiful and more precious. Gentlemen, you will forgive me,—I will not speak mere words of flattery,—but there is not a ruler in the whole civilized world in whose success, in whose welfare, we take more real and living interest than in that of the President of the United States. The dauntless courage of that man, his absolute integrity, his enlightenment, his foresight, have won for him a place in the hearts of the English people; and, believe me, it is only the fear of those mischievous marplots who, when Englishmen say a good word, an honest word of conviction, about some of your great men, are ready to bespatter them with mud simply because of the admiration of the English people,—it is only that fear that checks many a word more of admiration for this great man. And so, gentlemen, what can I do but thank you once more for your gracious act in remembering in this place of honor our beloved King, and I thank you from my heart.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know if all of you were able to crowd into the gallery this morning, but those of you who were, and heard the feast of reason, will now be only the more thankful for the opportunity of hearing the flow of soul,—Professor Welch.

Professor WELCH. Mr. President, your Excellency, Alumni of the Harvard Medical School,—I feel as if I had about talked out all that I had to say, but such an occasion as this does suggest new thoughts, and the one thought which is in my mind is that it has a significance without any parallel in the history of medicine in this country. It represents an elevation of sentiment, an elevation of advancement in medicine, which is unequalled in our past history. What is the Harvard Medical School? It is not these buildings which we have dedicated: it is the body of men who are collected here. They embody the splendid conditions of the School. To them the great memories of the past have been handed down, and upon them rests the reputation of the School. When one looks around here, does it not thrill the heart of any one who is interested in the standing of medicine in this country to be present here to-day? It thrills my heart. It must thrill the heart of all with pride who are here to-day as guests. And, if it thrills our hearts to know what your great good fortune has been here, what must be your exaltation in the achievements of the present! I have scarcely heard a more inspiring speech than was made by the Governor, because he has presented the results in a practical form of the campaign which has been going on, although, I think, it has only been initiated for a short time in this country, with reference to this great movement referred to so eloquently in his address,—the prevention of disease. It represents an advancement in that direction of which we all can be proud. I think it well worth having come here to know what this enlightened Commonwealth has accomplished in that direction, and it is a lesson for the whole country. It makes one feel an assurance for the future of medicine in this country. I am proud, therefore, to have been present. I shall go back with a renewed inspiration, and feel a confidence in the future of our profession from what I have seen and what I have heard here which nothing can shake.

The CHAIRMAN. We hear nowadays, in describing the great advantages now open to medical students of this country, that it will no longer be necessary for medical students to go abroad to complete their medical education. Many of us cannot applaud that sentiment. Glad as we shall be that our successors may not have to spend a few days tossing on the ocean, we shall be very sorry if our successors shall miss the inspiration that so many of us for ourselves have received in Germany. They may not have to cross the ocean for mere scientific knowledge; but it will be for a long time to the advantages of medical students to go to Germany if for nothing more than to come in contact with the patient, truth-seeking, devoted, generous professors of medicine. We are extremely fortunate in having with us a professor from the University of Freiburg who has kindly consented to speak to us. I have the honor of introducing Professor Keibel, of Freiburg.

Professor KEIBEL. Herr Präsident, meine Herren,—Erbaut auf einem Grunde, der dem Wasser abgewonnen, erheben sich, mächtig aufstrebend in stolzer, ernster Schönheit, die Gebäude, welche Sie gestern der Wissenschaft geweiht haben; mögen sie stets ein Sinnbild der machtvoll sich entwickelnden amerikanischen Wissenschaft sein. Aber noch einen anderen Wunsch habe ich. Vielfach ist es mir in diesen unvergleichlichen Tagen zum Bewusstsein gekommen, wie innig die Bande sind welche amerikanische und deutsche Wissenschaft verbinden. Mögen diese innigen Beziehungen zwischen amerikanischer und deutscher Wissenschaft wachsen und tiefer werden immerdar.

The CHAIRMAN. In imitation of college commencement dinners when the youngest graduate is presented, I am going to ask to speak to us to-day our youngest doctor, long associated with children, Professor Abraham Jacobi.

Professor JACOBI. Mr. President and Graduates,—Nothing pleases me more than to obey orders—that is why I rise—and to follow the example of better men. I saw our President, I saw Dr. Shattuck, refer to their manuscripts. Allow me the same privilege, and save some of your time. First, however, let me allude to the gentle mention which was made of my age. I am just old enough to have old friends. One of them was, or is, Kallimachos, who died lately—two thousand years ago—in Alexandria, Egypt. He told me—and you, too, for that matter—that big books—he meant long speeches—are big nuisances; and a modern writer whom some of you remember and all of you know, Sir James Paget, demanded that none but orators should deliver after-dinner addresses.

Let me, therefore, be satisfied with expressing my joy at the increasing smallness of the globe, which permits me to see from time to time both fellow-citizens and so-called foreigners whom I admire and revere, and long to behold and listen to. It is in that spirit that I like to come to Boston, mainly,—though it is rapidly becoming as big and rich and commercial (I hope not so mercenary and meretricious) as older towns I know, because it cannot divest itself of its Puritan history and of its old stanch principles, and of the pervading flavor of Harvard; and because, if it would, it could not extinguish the memory and spiritual influence of Emerson and Thoreau and Whittier and Holmes and Longfellow and Lowell.

This always living and quickening Boston has been to me as great a leader as to you. Yesterday has added another one to the æsthetic and ethic wonders of the world. I have not gotten over the astounding impression conveyed by your new buildings since I beheld them a few months ago. They staggered me with the suddenness of a revelation. We Americans are used to big and grand things. Like the giants of old, who piled Ossa on Pelion to attack the gods, we conquer the sky, tunnel the earth and the rivers, and the other ends of our bridges are lost in a dim perspective; and our conquests of unknown people and territories are so distant and rapid that even the Declaration of Independence lost its breath in following from afar our rapid movements. Only once in my recollection we added surpassing beauty to great enterprises. That was when, thirteen years ago, the White City of Chicago bewildered and charmed the world by its combination of modern hugeness with the choicest architectural beauties of Attica. But that impressive splendor was predestined to disappear. But your new Boston edifices are to last and to serve for even more than the purpose of pleasing the eye and satisfying a cultured taste. They are as choice and as chaste as Greek temples. These, however, were small. The Parthenon alone gives us an example of what the people of Hellas could accomplish when they meant to add size to beauty in the solemn service of their gods.

The vastness of your temples of science is offset by nothing more than their harmony. Their style took me back to Pericles and Phidias. Their size, however, suggests the immense necessities of the present and future. To me, staring and dreaming in front of those antique-modern majestic masses, with what they mean for a naturally slow but persistent evolution of human knowledge, there came the images of old things and the new, coherent and kin. Up came to my imagination an uninterrupted line of Kos, and Alexandria, and Salerno, and Berlin, and Baltimore, and Boston; and men, far apart as they say in their history books, appeared to me,—was it under the Athenian olive-tree, was it in these houses of beauty? I did not care. But I saw them in cheery good company: Hippocrates and Erasistratos, Vesalius, Harvey, Morgagni, Bichat, Laennec, Virchow, Osler, and Welch; the Warrens, the Cheevers, the Bowditches, the Shattucks, Theobald Smith, and many others through the centuries and of the present time.

I want you to see to it, all of you young men, only see that they admit you also to their ranks. It is choice company. If you want to know how choice, study the history of your art and science.

As your architectural beauties stand for æsthetic and practical ends, in what relation will they stand to the University and the medical profession? The University is not only a place for young men to be drilled until they may be able to obtain a diploma. It is, and must be more developed into, a place, first for general culture, second for special teaching, and finally for research. The large number of scientific American journals on anatomy, on physiology, on experimental medicine, on medical research, on biological chemistry, two of which are edited in Boston, proves the trend of the American profession. When only one of them—that on experimental medicine—had been in existence a few years, Clifford Allbut wrote me that they had nothing of the kind in Great Britain. That is the sort of special work universities are expected to foster, but it should be considered as a means to elevate medicine in general. They furnish and teach special work, and advance medicine by making it more profound. Nobody appreciates that more than the general practitioners. Their eyes are not hemmed in by blinders, nor is their horizon narrowed by constant application to a special subject, nor is a speculum the only instrument through which to see the whole world. That is why the most useful specialist—useful both to the patient and to the practitioner who sends him—is he who turns to a specialty only after having been a general practitioner. In this manner the mutual helpfulness which should actuate the medical practice, as it should be the prevailing factor in social relations, will be best accomplished. For the laboratory worker and the searching specialist should never forget what we, the general practitioners, both know and practise,—that all medical work in and out of universities will be required for the service of mankind, and that every result must finally be utilized for the prevention and cure of disease. That is recognized all over the world, for boundary lines are no longer in existence. French, German, Anglo-Saxon medicine are things and terms of the past. Medicine has become cosmopolitan. Its methods, like its aims, are the same all over the world; for our enemies are the same. Infectious diseases are universal for rich and poor alike. Plagues are democratic, and no respecters of wealth or nationality. That is why the thoughtful physician, high or low, general practitioner or specialist, is imbued with the red cross instinct, and born and raised to be a good citizen, doing his best under unfavorable circumstances, and waiting for the future and its social improvements. Read, when printed, what both the President and William H. Welch had to say on that subject this very morning.

And now let me close these fragments with a personal remark. You were present this morning when a great honor was conferred upon me,—unsought, unexpected, surprising, and inspiring. I do not know where to bestow my thanks beyond the governing boards of the University for affording me a place amongst their select, only lately filled by the best, greatest, and sweetest of men, the most loyal and unselfish citizen, the wisest statesman, the initiator of vast political and economic reforms, mourned by friends and adversaries,—Carl Schurz. But my heart tells me to thank you all as the representatives of the magnificent and generous medical profession of the vast country which has befriended me since I began the life of a practitioner fifty-three years ago, as poor and unknown as perhaps none of my youngest friends here. To them, and mainly to those who despair of their future, I mean to say a few words, the old colleague to the young. I may not have another opportunity, for I have had to wait seventy-six years for this one.

If you have been told that my career was successful, I will give you a recipe. Hold nothing more sacred than time. Do not waste it, but sacrifice it willingly for your patients. The rest give to your books and to the laboratory and to the writing up of your cases. Keep in contact with other men's progress, and add what you have good reason to believe new. Be a good colleague. If a patient must be stolen, let the other man be the thief. Have the courage of your conviction. If there be a bad man in the profession, say so and prove it. But look for the good in every man's character and doings, and acknowledge it. Work in societies small and big, in town, State, and the Union. No lonely man will thrive. The profession, like the State, requires the best labor of every man. Be a good democratic citizen in your profession, as in the Commonwealth. Serve in low places, serve in high places when they are offered and when service is demanded. When you will advance in years, remember you were young, and never lose your contact with those younger than yourself. And, unsought and unsolicited, you will enjoy the respect of your peers.

The CHAIRMAN. Many gentlemen were probably somewhat astonished this morning in the theatre to hear of an older university on this continent than our own. I myself heard that for the first time, though I knew that the hospital in the City of Mexico long antedates any hospital in this country. We have with us a professor from that medical school, from that university, who comes, not only bringing with him the greetings from the university, but he comes under high commission from President Diaz of the Republic of Mexico,—Professor José Ramos.

Dr. JOSÉ RAMOS. Sr. Gobernador, Sr. Presidente, y Señores Profesores de la Universidad Harvard, Señores Alumnos, Señoras y Señores,—Es muy satisfactorio para mí, dirigiros un cordial saludo, y presentaros mis más sinceras felicitaciones, al inaugurarse los nuevos edificios de la Facultad Médica de esta reputada Universidad, que goza con justicia de universal renombre.

Pasaron ya los tiempos en que la enseñanza médica, basada en una estrecha y superficial rutina, no podía suministrar á los alumnos, sino conocimientos imperfectos, y muchas veces erróneos relativos al importante Arte de curar. Los notables y no interrumpidos descubrimientos, que de tiempo atrás, se vienen realizando, han permitido que la Medicina en sus diversos ramos, abandone el caracter puramente empírico, que por tantos siglos ha conservado, llegando á alcanzar la categoría de verdadera ciencia, fundada en inducciones positivas, y en inteligentes deducciones.

Los maravillosos progresos iniciados en el Viejo Mundo, por esclarecidos genios, que han inmortalizado sus nombres, se han venido sucediendo en este hermoso y querido Continente de Colón, que ha entrado de lleno en el concierto del mundo científico, en el que ocupa un importante y merecido lugar.

Nuestra amada América, cuna gloriosa de los Washington, de los Hidalgo, y los Bolívar, ha sido también la ilustre Patria de sabios y literatos, honra no solo del Continente sino de la Humanidad entera.

Las ciencias médicas, que han seguido el movimiento progresivo general, cuentan también en el suelo americano, con ilustres representantes, respetados en todas partes, por su saber y por sus talentos.

Los notables estudios sobre neurastenia, atetosis, apendicitis, fiebre amarilla, paludismo, tifo exantemático y lepra, para no citar sino unos cuantos, estudios emprendidos en la Unión Americana, en México y en otros países del Nuevo Continente, han marcado reales y positivos adelantos, mereciendo la aprobación y el aplauso de los sabios.

No es extraño que Boston, la importante Metrópoli intelectual, la moderna "Atenas Americana," en donde las ciencias y las letras florecen con exhuberancia; no es extraño, que este notable emporio del saber, presente ahora, al mundo el grandioso espectáculo, de la dedicación de los nuevos y monumentales edificios, de su Facultad Médica, en donde se estudiarán con gran provecho, los varios ramos de la más noble y humanitaria ciencia.

El supremo Gobierno de México, que tiene á su cabeza al egregio General Don Porfirio Diaz, admirador entusiasta del progreso, é insigne protector de las ciencias y las letras, ha tenido á bien, por conducto de su digno Subsecretario de Fomento, Sr. Ing. Don Andrés Aldasoro, nombrarme en estas hermosas fiestas de la inteligencia, y en compañía del distin-guido naturalista Sr. George Russel Shaw, representante de nuestro Instituto Médico Nacional, cortesmente invitado por la Universidad Harvard, para las ceremonias de dedicación.

El Instituto científico que me honro en representar, tiene el placer de dirigiros por mi conducto, sus muestras de congratulación por el acto solemne que se celebra, y de manifestaros sus sentimientos de cordial simpatía, haciendo fervientes votos por el constante progreso de esta renombrada Universidad, así como por el engrandecimiento no interrumpido de vuestra gran República y por la felicidad personal de su Excelencia el Sr. Teodoro Roosevelt, vuestro digno y distinguido Presidente.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, never mind your trains, never mind your patients. You never would leave this hall content without the opportunity to hear two of our dear professors, Bowditch and Warren. I wanted to call upon them both, but I selected one whose great-grandfather and grandfather and father have contributed largely to the success of the School, as well as himself, and whose son is now, as you know, an honored member of the Faculty, and whose grandson, I doubt not,—I suppose I have no right to give away Corporation secrets,—is, though a few months old, already slated for a future professorship in surgery.

Professor WARREN. Gentlemen,—The hour is so late, and you are such a busy set of men, that I hesitate to dwell upon some of the thoughts that have arisen in my mind while sitting here this afternoon. I will therefore content myself with dwelling upon one of them only, and that is the feeling that the work we entered upon several years ago is not yet completed by any means, that it has only just begun. Any one who went up in a balloon, and took a bird's-eye view of the plot of ground upon which the medical buildings stand will see that they occupy only a very small portion of the grounds which are dedicated to medicine, that the rest of that land must be occupied by hospitals, that the clinical side of the work remains to be developed. That is only one other side. Other suggestions of the kind of work with which the School can be occupied were made by our President this morning, such as public lectures, etc., which I will not attempt to dwell upon at this time of the day. But I will utter this additional cheering note at the close of the day's exercises,—that I am in the position to state that hospital construction will begin almost at once. I have the authority to state from those who know that hospital construction will begin upon these grounds in a very short time, and we, therefore, can see the beginning of the development of that portion of the work which is in hand. Gentlemen, my colleague and I are laying down the flag which we have helped to carry aloft for so long a time; and, as we lay it down, we look to some young alumnus or some young member of the Faculty to spring forward, and seize it and carry it on to victory. At the present time all we can do is to stand here this evening, and say, "Nunc dimittis."

THE HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI FUND.

At a meeting of the Council held last spring, in considering the various ways in which the Association might be of practical use to the School, the question was raised whether it might not be possible to interest the body of the Alumni in a matter which seemed of real and vital importance to the Council; i.e., the expansion to its ideal development of the system of individual instruction, which of necessity involves the employment of a large number of enthusiastic, hard-working young teachers, ready to devote most of their time to the work. Such instruction, coming from a man fresh from the School, would, speaking broadly, consist chiefly in drill in methods and technique, as contrasted with that more critical teaching to be expected from the ripened experience of the older instructors. A single appointment of this nature in one department had abundantly proved the value of such instruction. It cannot be expected that a man fifteen years or so out of the School will regard such drill work with the enthusiasm of a man experiencing the delights of teaching for the first time, nor should the older instructor be called upon for such work. Section work and constant association with one teacher for the greater part of the working hours of day after day cannot but give a man a more thorough saturation with the subject of study for the time being than he could possibly get in any other way. One teacher cannot, however, properly attend to more than a few students at a time.

The School, while recognizing fully the value of such instruction, did not feel that the state of its finances warrant the expansion of the system that time, and so the Council of the Association undertook to see to what an extent the Alumni would take an active part in helping the School. Accordingly, a Committee was appointed to take full charge of the matter, consisting of the President, the Secretary, and Drs. R. C. Cabot, E. P. Joslin, and Malcolm Storer, with Dr. Storer as Treasurer.

In June an appeal was issued to every alumnus whose address was known, whether a member of the Association or not, asking for annual subscriptions, with the implied hope that such subscriptions would be numerous rather than of necessity large, for it is the desire of the Council that this movement be a thoroughly representative one; for, while assured unofficially in a general way that the Faculty is in sympathy with its aims, its suggestions would certainly be given more consideration if backed by a large number of the Alumni.

A second appeal was issued in October, shortly after the dedication of the New School.

In attempting to raise any money, the Committee appreciated that they were undertaking what might prove a very disappointing task, for the loyalty of a man to his Medical School does not compare with that to his Alma Mater. Doctors are not, as a rule, especially burdened with surplus funds, the more successful men in other cities are generally associated with other medical schools whose claims are properly paramount, and, furthermore, the Boston men, from whom the most generous response might naturally have been expected, had been so drained by the A. M. A. meeting and other medical subscriptions that but little could be hoped from them. But in spite of all this the response has been gratifying. Some 325 men have subscribed. Nearly half of these live outside of Boston, and, as it is confidently hoped that by next year the Boston men will have recovered sufficiently to take a more generous share in the movement, the number of subscribers will then, in all probability, be largely increased.

It is of interest that classes as far back as 1842 have been heard from, while the large number of subscribers from 1905 and 1906 show that the kind of instruction we hope to aid the School in giving more of is thoroughly appreciated by the men who have been fortunate enough to receive any of it. Incidentally, subscriptions have been received from two Alumni who, while practising homœopathy, have loyally responded to the call.

The total amount received thus far has been $2,787, while the expenses of preparing a card catalogue of Alumni, issuing two circulars, etc., has been $306, leaving a net result of $2,481. Of this $1,200 has been paid Harvard University, to be used by the Faculty of the Medical School as may seem best along the general lines indicated, the balance being held for use next year. At the same time there was paid to the University the sum of $2,300, the proceeds of a former appeal, to be known as the Medical Alumni Fund, which shall be allowed to increase for the present, and be used at some future time for the good of the School as the Council of the Alumni shall direct. Of course, the amount of this subscription is entirely inadequate to expand the system of individual instruction to the point desired by the Association, but it is enough, however, to make a very good beginning; and as by far the greater part of it is pledged annually, and as many of the subscribers have promised to increase their annual contributions, it is felt that with the natural increase in the number of subscribers as the value of the work becomes better known, it will not be long before the School can confidently count upon an annual gift from the Alumni that will be of very material assistance.

The Council wishes to make each man feel that, when he leaves the School, he does not sever his connection with it. It wants every alumnus, of course, to become a member of the Association. It also wants him to feel, equally as a matter of course, that he is going to make an annual contribution to the School—small or great—for the rest of his life, to help repay in some feeble measure what the School has done for him.

TEACHING AND OPPORTUNITIES IN THE HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL OF TO-DAY.

No less remarkable than the changes in the outward form and habitation of the Medical School are the changes developed during the last few years in the course of instruction and in the broadening of the opportunities for graduate work. Many Alumni living even in its immediate vicinity have little realization of the progress which has been made toward the attainment of the theoretical ideal of medical education, and those whose lot has been cast in places far from great medical centres, and whose student days are more or less remote, would be astounded if they should investigate the opportunities which are offered.

With the idea of bringing the Alumni into touch with present-day conditions, we have prepared a careful account of the course and methods of instruction now offered in the chief Departments of the School, in the conviction that it will be of the greatest interest to them.*

THE DEPARTMENT OF ANATOMY.

Since gross anatomy is largely an exact and fixed science, we shall not expect to find the same great changes in its teaching which characterize the teaching of other branches which yearly expand and make progress through new discoveries. Yet new ideals in teaching have made themselves felt as forcibly and insistently in anatomy as in other branches, and we find that the Department of Anatomy in the Harvard Medical School has not been behindhand in attaining to higher standards of instruction. This has been the more necessary because, however successful the lately introduced "concentration system" of instruction has been in other branches, it is certain that it is ill-suited to this one. Anatomy is the first study in his new profession to which the student is introduced. The whole subject is to most men sufficiently difficult on account of its novelty. Moreover, the student finds little opportunity to make it easier by the exercise of his reasoning faculty. It presents a vast mass of facts which must be mastered by sheer force of memory, and laboratory work which yields results only after the attainment of a fair degree of manual dexterity and skill in hitherto unfamiliar fields. Little wonder, then, that it is more difficult for the student to master the subject by concentrated effort during the mornings of four months than it was formerly, when the study was spread more thinly over the first two years, so that the student had time to become familiar with it, and by iteration and reiteration to accomplish the memorizing of a large number of facts, even though the actual time devoted to instruction were no greater.

To meet this difficulty occasioned by the introduction of the "concentration system," the efficiency of the instruction has been vastly increased by bringing the system of small section and individual teaching up to a high degree of perfection. The personnel of the department is at present as follows:—

Thomas Dwight, M.D., LL.D., Parkman Professor of Anatomy.

John Warren, M.D., Demonstrator of Anatomy.

Elisha Flagg, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

Harris P. Mosher, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

Charles S. Butler, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

Henry O. Marcy, Jr., M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

David Cheever, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

David D. Scannell, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

James D. Barney, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

Arial W. George, M.D., Assistant in Anatomy.

The framework of the course consists of a series of lectures by Professor Thomas Dwight from October to January, inclusive, which deal with fundamental principles and give an outline of systematic anatomy, enabling the student to obtain a sense of relative values and perspective which can only be presented by a teacher of long experience. Especial attention is devoted to certain organs or regions where dissection alone would yield but imperfect knowledge. These lectures are elaborately illustrated by dissections, charts, papier-maché models, the living model, and by specimens from the Warren Anatomical Museum, among the most noteworthy of which may be mentioned Professor Dwight's splendid series of variations of the bony skeleton. Four times a week immediately following the lecture, the students attend in sections an exercise by the Demonstrator, where the dissection which they are about to undertake is gone over, and every structure which they are expected to find is demonstrated and described. After this exercise the students may personally examine the dissection, and by questions clear up any doubtful points. They then go to the laboratory, where they are divided into small groups, which each occupy one of the small dissecting rooms. Each group is in charge of an Assistant Instructor, who aids the student, keeps him up to a certain level of excellence in dissection, and quizzes him on his work at frequent intervals. Thus he dissects the three parts of the body under the most favorable conditions of laboratory equipment and of individual instruction. The study of the bones and of the brain and organs of sense is conducted in the same manner, the former occupying the early weeks of October, and the latter the afternoons of January. Among other aids to teaching may be mentioned the study of frozen sections, of which the department has a rich series. In fact, it may be said that the means and methods of illustrating the instruction in anatomy are probably unrivalled in this country.

In the summer course and graduate departments several carefully planned courses are offered to serve needs which experience has shown frequently to arise, but the Department considers it most important to make every effort to satisfy the special and peculiar requirements of the individual student. The Professor and younger members of the staff hold themselves in readiness to assist any qualified student or graduate in reviewing or conducting investigations in any department of anatomy so far as is possible with the material and time at their disposal, and the intention is never to disappoint an applicant for an opportunity to study this subject.

THE DEPARTMENT OF COMPARATIVE ANATOMY.

The Department of Comparative Anatomy was added to the organization of the School when the present buildings were occupied. It owes its existence very largely to the interest of President Eliot. At the time that the plans for the new School were under consideration, President Eliot included among his estimates a sufficient endowment to provide an income to maintain on an adequate scale the proposed new department. It was to have a professor, an instructor, a demonstrator, and an assistant, whose total salaries were estimated at $7,000; and there was also to be provided an annual appropriation of $1,200. Instead of calling a new professor, the Department of Histology and Embryology was consolidated with that of Comparative Anatomy, and Dr. C. S. Minot was appointed the first James Stillman Professor of Comparative Anatomy.

Dr. Frederick T. Lewis is Assistant Professor of Embryology, Dr. John L. Bremer is Demonstrator of Histology, and Dr. L. D. Shepard is Instructor in Histology.

The only new appointment was that of Dr. Leonard W. Williams as Instructor in Comparative Anatomy. In this way, by combining the new department with one already existing in the School, a great saving of expense has been effected; yet, with this organization and with a comparatively small appropriation, it has been possible to initiate the new work on a modest but reasonable scale. If the department proves useful, it will naturally be expected to grow, and this growth will depend entirely on its success in meeting the needs of students of medicine and in extending our knowledge of animal structures.

One of the chief claims which was put forward for the new buildings, with their endowment, was the importance of developing scientific research in connection with the various laboratories, and, inasmuch as the experimental work in the medical sciences, especially in physiology and pathology, is necessarily conducted upon animals, it is obvious that comparative study must in the future have increasing importance in the advancement of medical knowledge, for it seems clear that experiments on animals can be conducted properly only when their structure has been adequately studied. Moreover, comparative anatomy is in itself worthy of development, for it is a vast and but poorly known subject of the highest scientific interest, and it offers much of direct practical value to medical men. The considerations thus briefly indicated led to the conviction that the teaching of comparative anatomy must play an important part in the future development of the School, and it is believed that, since the endowment secured for the "Medical School undertaking" was given to carry out the plans as formulated by President Eliot, the University will give all possible aid in the development of the department.

The fact that the new department is an integral part of the Medical School must necessarily determine to a great extent the character of its development. While it is true that freedom of research should be preserved and that the scope of investigations in comparative anatomy going on in the laboratory should not be limited by any arbitrary restrictions, yet such problems as have a more or less direct bearing upon medical questions must always have a predominating interest. In fact, all the original scientific work which has been going on in the department since its organization has an immediate interest for students of the medical sciences. The exact nature of this work is stated more fully below.

Naturally, the first and greatest duty of the department, as of the Department of Histology and Embryology which it has supplanted, is to give regular instruction to medical students. It has charge of the course in histology and embryology in the first year, and the facilities offered in the new buildings have rendered it possible to greatly improve that first-year course. The well-lighted and well-ventilated unit rooms have proved stimulating to the instructors and students alike. The division of the class into sections of twenty-four men has been very beneficial to the character of the work. Each unit room has a good equipment of apparatus, so that the students can now be taught the practical manipulations necessary for making good specimens for microscopic examination. Moreover, the Instructor in Comparative Anatomy has made a considerable number of beautiful preparations for demonstration purposes, illustrating the anatomy of the human embryo and of the animals most used in laboratory work. He has also supplied a number of preparations which show the anatomy of special organs. All of these have greatly helped the students to combine their histological and embryological studies with their anatomical knowledge. It is planned next year to have a set of preparations, illustrating the anatomy of the important organs, placed in each unit room for more intimate study.

An innovation was made during the current academic year in regard to fourth-year instruction. An agreement was made with the Departments of Otology, Ophthalmology, and Laryngology to receive in the laboratory for the afternoons of two months the fourth-year students who were making a specialty of those branches. They were given special instruction in the histology and embryology of the ear, eye, nose, and throat. Other laboratory courses of corresponding scope in anatomy, physiology, and pathology were also given by the respective departments to the same men. The mornings were devoted to clinical work. The special students, therefore, divided the year so as to give half their time to laboratory work and half to clinical work, all connected with their specialty. This plan was found most satisfactory. The new course in the laboratory of comparative anatomy was given by Dr. Williams. It seems desirable that a similar plan should be adopted for other specialties, and it is hoped that this may be accomplished, so that there will be some extension of the work next year. Such a plan ought to prove most attractive to students wishing to devote themselves to a specialty during their fourth year.

During the current year the plan for giving the higher degrees of M.S., S.D., and Ph.D. to students in the medical sciences, has gone into effect. In most cases instruction in comparative anatomy will be necessary to obtain these degrees, and we must look forward to providing such instruction, but it is believed that the present staff of the laboratory is sufficient to meet the calls which may be put upon it in the immediate future. It is probable, however, that the demand for this advanced instruction in the medical sciences will grow, because there is a great need of well-trained men to take positions in anatomy, physiology, pathology, and like subjects, in the medical schools throughout the country. The demand for such men is far greater than the supply, and all the better schools of the United States and Canada are now seeking men who are not practitioners, but professional scientists, to give the necessary instruction in their laboratories.

To illustrate the character of the work being done, it may be stated that at a meeting of the Boston Society of Medical Sciences, held on April 7, the evening was devoted entirely to the presentation of the results of recent work in the Department of Comparative Anatomy. A brief paper was presented by every member of the staff, and by Dr. Meigs, who used the laboratory for the histological portion of his studies concerning the physiology of muscles. Dr. Meigs's research was important, and threw new light on the nature of the contraction of smooth and striated muscles and on the fundamental difference in the method of their physiological action. Dr. Williams reported on the history of the notochord, and demonstrated that it affects the nature of the vertebral joints and determines the regions in which chordoma is likely to occur. Contrary to the general belief, the notochord does not degenerate, but undergoes a considerable growth and differentiation. Dr. V. E. Emmel presented a paper on regeneration, the result of his experiments on the reproduction of the claws of lobsters. He believes that the asymmetry of the claws is not inherent, but may be altered by artificial conditions during development. The work is very significant in its bearing upon the problem of the origin of asymmetrical structures. Mr. R. E. Scammon discussed the accessory chromosome as a determinant of sex. Dr. Thyng described several models of the pancreas in embryos of the cat, rabbit, pig, and man, which bring out new points in the development of this organ, and offer new explanations of various anomalies. Dr. F. T. Lewis described the intestinal diverticula of mammalian embryos. There is reason to believe that the diverticula are always present, and may sometimes become detached, thus giving rise to mesenteric cysts. Dr. J. L. Bremer described the roots and branches of the abducent and hypoglossal nerves in human embryos, showing that there is a great range in the origin and distribution of the fibres of these nerves which has not hitherto been suspected. These variations probably also persist in certain cases in the adult.

This brief résumé indicates the range of work in research for which the laboratory furnishes opportunities. A number of additional researches are now in progress, two of which may be mentioned. The first is the monograph on the development of the dog-fish, which Mr. Scammon is preparing. The second is a work on "Age, Growth, and Death," by Dr. Minot, which is to be issued in book form and is now passing through the press. The book contains a résumé of his general views, resulting from many years of study upon the problems with which the volume deals. In brief, it may be said that every one officially connected with the laboratory is actively engaged in research. Attention may be called to the fact that all of these researches find fitting place in a medical laboratory, and they express the ambition of the department to meet its obligations as a portion of a great medical institution.

The Embryological Collection, which has been formed in the laboratory during the last twelve years, is unique in character and extent. It comprises nearly 1,400 series of sections of vertebrate embryos. It has proved an invaluable aid in all kinds of embryological research, and is in constant daily use by the workers in the laboratory. So far as known, no similar collection exists elsewhere in the world.

As a supplement to this Embryological Collection, the department plans to add a collection of microscopic preparations of the various organs and tissues of the adult forms corresponding to the vertebrates represented in the Embryological Collection. This would not only serve as a basis for the teaching of comparative histology, but would prove valuable as supplying a normal standard to investigators in the field of animal pathology.

In conclusion, it may be said that it is the hope of all the members of the department to render it of increasing usefulness to the School and to justify its foundation and continued existence by its achievements. We are part of a distinguished medical organization, and as such we wish to serve. By so doing we shall best prove our appreciation of the wisdom of President Eliot in bringing about the introduction of teaching and research in comparative anatomy as one of the essential functions of the Harvard Medical School.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PHYSIOLOGY.

To many Alumni the remembrance of instruction in physiology is associated with the small lecture-room on the second floor of the Boylston Street Building, and with the admirable lectures and demonstrations which Professor H. P. Bowditch gave there for so many years, and perhaps also with the reading of a conference paper before the class or with a venturesome answer at the quiz on Saturday mornings. Other Alumni, who studied physiology after laboratory work was added, will recall the performance of experiments at the old tables on the shelf-like gallery that overlooked the main room of the department. Some of these men would doubtless still find on their graphic records the evidence of how violently the gallery shook when any one walked over its unsteady boards. Few entered the library room, so small and so crowded with books and tables and chairs that students were not welcomed. Fewer still saw the little shop where the apparatus was made, and the still smaller rooms where the instructors were crowded between their desks.

To men with these memories how great would seem the change in the new buildings of the School! There are spacious offices for each member of the instructing staff, and, wonderful to say, these rooms are well lighted and well ventilated. There are private laboratories for the professors, and numerous small individual laboratories for persons engaged in research. There is a large shop, fitted with the best machinery and supervised by an expert mechanic. And these are wholly apart from the excellent provisions that have been made for the students.

The undergraduate study of physiology is in charge of Walter B. Cannon, M.D., George Higginson, Professor of Physiology, who is assisted by Ernest G. Martin, Ph.D., and Edward B. Meigs, M.D., Instructors in Physiology.

The new arrangement of courses has confined all of the required study to the mornings of the second half-year. During the entire period from February through May, between nine and one o'clock every morning, the students are kept busy with physiology. Altogether they spend in the building more than three hundred and fifty hours on the subject. Most of this time is devoted to the first-hand study of vital processes, pursued in the student laboratories. These laboratories are large rooms, provided with an abundance of light and with forced ventilation. In each room are twelve desks where the students work in pairs. In these laboratories they observe for themselves such phenomena as underlie the reaction of degeneration, the nature of reflexes in lower animals and in their own bodies, the use of the ophthalmoscope, the methods of testing blood pressure, the facts of hæmolysis, the measurements of respiratory capacity, the metabolism of carbonaceous and nitrogenous foods, and many other processes of physiological and of clinical interest.

These personal observations are supplemented by many special demonstrations, some of them performed with the help of the students. By means of laboratory exercises and demonstrations the students learn physiology by actual experience. The facts thus observed form the basis for the other instruction. These facts are discussed, for example, in the lectures; and other facts not observed by the students are then correlated with their experience. The lectures are kept as informal as possible, so that questions may be asked at any time by the instructor and by the class.

Besides learning the methods and the facts of physiology by personal observation, the students become acquainted with the methods and results of physiological discovery in the preparation of theses. Each student writes a thesis on some subject, such as heart-block, color-blindness, or neuromuscular fatigue, after reading the records of the original investigations on the subject. The Bowditch Library of Physiology and Biological Chemistry is a large room, accommodating easily fifty students at a time. This library, which was started by the foresight of Professor H. P. Bowditch, now contains about twelve thousand reprints and about four thousand volumes, including complete files of all the important journals. Into this library the students are welcomed for study and for reading, and during the second term it is usually a busy place. Of the theses that are written, about fifty are chosen each year to be read before the class. In these instances two students besides the reader are selected to prepare some single phase of the subject and to lead the discussion. The discussion is continued by the members of the class and by the staff, and frequently becomes animated, to say the least.

In order that the students shall review the work repeatedly as the course proceeds, and also that the instructors may judge the efficiency of the instruction, frequent written tests are given. If in these tests many students show that certain points are not clearly understood, these points are briefly discussed again before the class. If a student reveals, by his answers, general failure to grasp the subject intelligently, he is personally conferred with regarding the character of his work. Such conferences usually result in a better understanding between the instructor and the student and frequently in a marked improvement in the student's efforts.

One result of placing students on their own resources and requiring them to see for themselves is that they acquire an insight into the methods of research. It is common for students just through their first year to spend several months during the summer working at a problem in the laboratory.

The facilities for physiological investigation in the School are not surpassed elsewhere. There are two departments offering every opportunity for advanced work,—the Department of Physiology and the Department of Comparative Physiology, the latter under the charge of Professor W. T. Porter. In both departments fourth-year students and other qualified persons are received and directed in research. An interesting feature of recent researches in these departments is the combination of physiological and clinical interest which they have manifested. From the Department of Physiology several investigations have been published by young surgeons who have studied surgical problems from the physiological point of view. And in the Department of Comparative Physiology during the past year not only has a series of demonstrations of value in practical medicine and surgery been given, but several papers on the factors concerned in surgical shock have been published, which may modify prevailing conceptions on the subject.

In comparing the former conditions of physiological instruction and the more recent, one notes especially in the newer conditions the provisions for each student acquiring an intimate individual acquaintance with the processes of the body by his own observations, and also the facilities for his learning the methods by which new knowledge is discovered. Thus the student is trained to be an independent observer, able to judge the secondary sources of information, such as his text-books, at their true value, and in many cases able to examine a problem with intelligence and to work towards its solution. There is no better place than the Harvard Medical School for this training in the power that leads to independent judgment and to productive investigation, and there is no place which provides better facilities for physiological research.

THE DEPARTMENT OF BIOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY.

The teaching of chemistry has undergone some very fundamental changes within the last few years. The analysis of urine, sputum, blood, gastric contents, and fæces, which constituted so much of the work of the department in the time of Professor Wood, has been transferred to the Laboratory of Clinical Pathology of the Department of the Theory and Practice of Physic. A knowledge of general chemistry, qualitative analysis, and organic chemistry, is now required for admission to the School. The time of the first-year students thus set free is devoted mainly to the study of the chemical physiology of metabolism, both normal and pathological, and it is possible to give more thorough instruction in the chemical processes underlying normal and pathological function and structure than was formerly possible. The reconstructed department is called the "Department of Biological Chemistry," and its teaching staff includes:—

Otto Folin, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Biological Chemistry.

Carl L. Alsberg, M.D., Instructor in Biological Chemistry.

Lawrence J. Henderson, M.D., Instructor in Biological Chemistry.

Otis F. Black, A.M., Assistant in Biological Chemistry.

Francis H. McCrudden, S.B., Assistant in Biological Chemistry.

Frederic C. Black, Ph.D., Research Assistant in Biological Chemistry.

The beginning of the course for first-year students is devoted to lectures and laboratory practice on the constitution of the substances found in the animal body and the composition of the tissues, together with a consideration of some of the simpler principles of physical chemistry and their application to physiology. The later part of the course is devoted to lectures upon the chemical physiology and pathology of metabolism, with laboratory practice in some of the more important quantitative methods used in the clinical study of metabolism. After the technique of these methods has been mastered, they are applied, partly in co-operation with the Department of Physiology, in experiments chosen to illustrate some of the fundamental principles of metabolism. An effort is also made to stimulate the student to read the literature of the subject, and to acquire a first-hand knowledge of the problems engaging the attention of bio-chemists. With this end in view a series of seminars is held, devoted to subjects which are unsuited to didactic treatment, either because they involve questions that are still under discussion or because they are not commonly made part of medical studies. The course as now given is approximately equivalent to the moderately advanced courses in science in Cambridge. A more extended set course is hardly desirable for students of medicine. Additional training can best be acquired in fourth-year electives, research, and other forms of advanced work.

The endeavor has been made to increase the opportunities for such advanced work. The aim has been, not merely to help in the training of practitioners of medicine, but also to train a few teachers and investigators to send forth to other institutions. It is believed that this is one of the most potent ways in which the Department can do its share in extending the influence and usefulness of the School. With the same end in view, an arrangement was made some two years ago with the Division of Chemistry at Cambridge, whereby the latter agreed to recommend satisfactory candidates for the degree of Ph.D. in the subject "Biological Chemistry." One man has already been working under this arrangement, and others have indicated their intention of doing so. In the future this arrangement will be unnecessary because the School itself is to grant higher degrees.

This development has been accompanied by greater activity in research. Dr. Folin, with his assistant and collaborators, has been engaged in the study of various problems in metabolism and with the development of accurate analytical methods necessary in such research. In the immediate future he is to undertake, with a corps of assistants, an extended research for the Federal Government in connection with the Pure Food Law. This work will be somewhat analogous to the investigations conducted by Dr. Wiley upon his "poison squad." Dr. Alsberg, with his collaborators, has been engaged, at Wood's Hole during the summer, at the School during the winter, in research upon the bio-chemistry of some of the lower animals. Some of his results throw light upon unsolved problems concerning the highest forms. This comparative work has been made possible by Dr. Alsberg's connection with the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce and Labor. He has been conducting for the Bureau during the summer investigations upon the chemical composition and food value of marine organisms not at present used for food. Dr. Henderson has been engaged upon research on the application of physical chemistry to physiology. He has been more especially interested in studying various forms of chemical equilibrium in the animal body,—a line of work in which he has been assisted by Mr. Black. In addition to his work at the Medical School, Dr. Henderson has been carrying on some research and teaching in Cambridge, thereby bringing the two laboratories in closer contact,—no small advantage to a young department. Mr. Black, in addition to collaborating with Dr. Henderson, has been engaged in devising accurate analytical methods for some of the substances occurring pathologically in urine. Dr. McCrudden has been engaged upon metabolism investigations on osteomalacia and castration, as well as upon perfecting the methods for the determination of some of the inorganic constituents of the urine.

Besides the work undertaken by the staff and their collaborators, a number of investigations of a more purely clinical nature have been undertaken by practising physicians. The laboratory has at all times been open to such men, and all possible help and encouragement is given them. It is believed that this is a most important function of the laboratory, by which it can best serve the medical community.

THE DEPARTMENT OF BACTERIOLOGY.

Bacteriology, one of the youngest of the Medical Sciences, yields to no other in the importance of its fundamental relation to the art of healing, yet by its very nature it cannot claim as much of the attention of the average student of medicine as many other branches, its equals or inferiors in this respect. Nothing is more essential than that the average student shall have a clear conception of the broad principles underlying the study of bacteria and the phenomena of their growth either within or without the human body, and it is necessary that he shall have first-hand knowledge of the more common pathogenic forms, and the methods of cultivating and identifying them for purposes of diagnosis and treatment. But it is manifestly unwise for him to attempt to become an expert in difficult technical procedures which will probably always belong to the realm of the scientific laboratory worker rather than to the clinician.

The required course, therefore, occupies but two months during the second year. As heretofore, it is in charge of Professor Harold C. Ernst, who lectures daily (except Saturdays) during October and November, and gives the students a general view of the subject and of methods of practical work. In the laboratory, to which is devoted three hours daily during the same period, Professor Ernst is assisted by Dr. Langdon Frothingham, Instructor, and Drs. Page, Perry, Worthington, Everett, and Tobey, Assistants in Bacteriology. Here each student is required to become familiar with the simpler methods of manipulation and staining which are of especial clinical value, and with the more prominent of the pathogenic bacteria.

To the advanced or graduate student the Department of Bacteriology offers full opportunity for work in all branches of the subject. Courses are laid out to suit the needs of the individual student, and vary in length in accordance with those needs. Beginners are accepted under special conditions. Whenever it is possible, such students are advised to take the regular course required for undergraduates, for by so doing a general view of the subject is obtained that it is not possible to secure at other times. While this course is going on, the entire staff is fully occupied, so that the department cannot then accept other students not qualified to work alone. At other times of the year individual students may usually be received,—either as beginners or as special workers. Much attention has always been given to the offering of facilities for and practice in the methods of bacteriological diagnosis. Abundant material for such purposes is always at hand or easily obtainable, and the student may work at perfecting himself in these methods at such hours as are convenient. These facilities include, among those more commonly employed or of prime importance, the methods of diagnosis in Typhoid Fever, Tuberculosis, Diphtheria, Rabies, Glanders, Syphilis, Gonorrhœa, Malaria, Trypanosomiasis. Much work with the opsonins may be done by a student wishing to specialize in this direction, and facilities for the preparation of vaccines and the study of opsonic indices are at hand and abundant. A large collection of bacteria is kept constantly in growing condition, and includes all of the important pathogenic bacteria and many of those with which these are allied. In response to a recent request for "acid-fast" bacteria, the Department was able to send cultures of twenty-six varieties, and this is but one of many illustrations that might be given of the usefulness of this collection. To the student it means that he may have cultures of all the important pathogenic bacteria for immediate study at any time. The apparatus at hand is large and varied in amount, and is constantly being added to, so that special lines of investigation may be taken up immediately. When special apparatus is required, it is secured without unnecessary delay and set up for use at once. The equipment includes full apparatus for photomicrographic, ultra-violet, and gross photography, projection drawing apparatus, and dark-ground illumination for the study of living bacteria. To illustrate the scope of the work that may be done in this department, there are now going on researches upon Rabies, Glanders, Trypanosomiasis, Blastomycosis, the ophthalmo-tuberculin reactions, and Tuberculosis and Typhoid Fever; studies of living bacteria with dark-ground illumination and with ultra-violet light; training candidates for Board of Health Laboratories and beginners.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PATHOLOGY.

The Department of Pathology is like the clinical departments in one important respect: it must have connection with hospitals in order to obtain pathological material for teaching and research purposes. Fortunately, this connection is intimate between the Harvard Medical School and the principal hospitals of Boston. The heads of these hospital laboratories are all members of the department of pathology. In addition to the advantages of these hospital connections a considerable amount of valuable material comes to the central laboratory at the School from specimens sent for diagnosis by practitioners and from private autopsies. For this service the Department of Pathology charges a small fee, provided the family concerned can afford to pay it.

The present staff of the pathological department and its relations to the different hospital laboratories is shown in the following list:—

William T. Councilman, M.D., Shattuck Professor of Pathological Anatomy; Visiting Pathologist to the Boston City Hospital.

Frank B. Mallory, M.D., Associate Professor of Pathology; First Assistant Visiting Pathologist to the Boston City Hospital; Pathologist to the Children's Hospital.

James H. Wright, M.D., Assistant Professor of Pathology; Director of the Clinico-pathological Laboratory of the Massachusetts General Hospital.

Elmer E. Southard, M.D., Assistant Professor of Neuropathology; Pathologist to the Danvers Insane Hospital.

S. Burt Wolbach, M.D., Instructor in Pathology; Second Assistant Visiting Pathologist to the Boston City Hospital.

Ernest E. Tyzzer, M.D., Assistant in Pathology.

Frederick P. Gay, M.D., Assistant in Pathology.

Lawrence J. Rhea, M.D., Assistant in Pathology.

Alexander R. Robertson, M.D., C.M., Assistant in Pathology; Pathologist to the Long Island Hospital.

Ernest T. F. Richards, M.D., Assistant in Pathology and in Neuropathology.

Frederick H. Verhoeff, M.D., Instructor in Ophthalmic Pathology; Assistant Ophthalmic Surgeon and Pathologist to the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary.

In addition there are five assistants in pathology at the Boston City Hospital, one at the Massachusetts General Hospital, one at the Children's Hospital, and two at the Danvers Insane Hospital. Seven of these are salaried assistants, the other two are internes. This gives, therefore, a staff of twenty men actively engaged in pathology. Most of them take part in teaching, and all engage in research work.

The required course of instruction in pathology occupies all the first half of the second year, except the afternoons of two months which are devoted to bacteriology. The instruction consists of laboratory work, lectures, demonstrations, attendance on post-mortem examinations at the hospitals, and written recitations.

The laboratory work consists of the study of the effects produced on living tissues by various injurious agents. The lesions are taken up first from the general point of view, and then the effects of special pathogenic agents, such as the common pus-producing organisms, the typhoid, diphtheria, and tubercle bacilli, the amœba coli, etc., are studied in greater detail. Then follow the local and systemic effects produced by congenital and acquired lesions of the heart, kidneys, and other organs; in other words, the study of the conditions included under the term general pathology. Next tumors are taken up from the general point of view. The study of the special pathology of the organs is carried out mainly by the demonstration and detailed study of the organs derived from autopsies, aided by museum material. Especial study is devoted to those organic lesions which are most frequently encountered. In the time limits of the course it is obviously impossible to give thorough instruction on all organic diseases. Each year, however, one or more of the important systems of organs are taken up, and the pathological lesions as modified by situation and structure fully discussed and demonstrated. In this way the student not only learns the general conditions under the operation of which special lesions are produced, but he studies types in certain organs which are more or less completely reproduced in other organs. There is no longer so much need for the study of special pathology, since this field is also partly covered in internal medicine and surgery.

The work of the day is begun with a short lecture by the instructor, in which the work of the preceding day is briefly reviewed and the work and preparations for the day explained.

There is a daily lecture given from 12 to 1 o'clock. These lectures are for the most part given by Professor Councilman. Professor Smith lectures daily on animal parasites during the period of his course. Lectures are also given by other members of the department who have special knowledge of the diseases or organs being considered. At various times Professor Mallory has given the lectures on tumors and on typhoid fever, Dr. Christian on forms of degeneration, Dr. Wolbach on blastomycotic infections, Dr. Gay on pathological changes in the blood serum, Dr. Tyzzer on the experimental tumors of animals, etc. In general, it is not sought to make the lecture the vehicle for acquiring new knowledge, but by it to co-ordinate and amplify the knowledge which the student has acquired by the study of objects. It is difficult to say how much value such lectures have. The students consider them a valuable part of the course, and always attend. However, in years when the lectures have been omitted or greatly reduced in numbers and in time, the students have seemed, as judged by laboratory work and examinations, to have made about equal progress.

The essential point in the plan of instruction as outlined above is that the student studies tissues and organs at close hand, and his work receives stimulus and direction.

The demonstrations are of three kinds: (1) the study of the fresh pathological material received from autopsies at the different hospitals and from private cases, and also the tumors and other specimens removed at surgical operations. The students are taught how to study and describe the pathological conditions present by sight, weight, touch, exact measurements, and microscopic examination of sections made directly from the tissues being studied. In this way the student learns to correlate the naked-eye appearance with the underlying microscopic changes.

(2) The study of various pathological conditions in tissues preserved by Kaiserling's method, so that the natural colors are retained as nearly as possible. The large collection of specimens in the Warren Museum is also utilized in these demonstrations.

(3) Stained specimens of various lesions are exhibited under microscopes. This enables the students to see a greater variety of lesions than it is possible to give them to keep permanently. Sections stained by special methods which it is not considered advisable to require the students to do are also often shown.

For these demonstrations the students are divided into sections of ten men each, as this has been found to be the largest number that an instructor can handle successfully.

For the post-mortem examinations the students in sections of ten are sent to the different hospitals, where they witness the performance of the autopsies as made by the members of the pathological staff, and listen to a description of the lesions present. So far as possible, a brief statement of the clinical symptoms observed during life is presented, and the relations between the lesions found and the symptoms discussed. When possible, the students are allowed to assist at the autopsies.

Written Recitations.—On Saturday mornings, students are given gross specimens or microscopic preparations showing lesions similar to those they have already studied, and they are required to write out a careful description of what they can see. They are trained, so far as possible, to state what they see in concise, clear, logical form. The descriptions are marked on a scale of ten, and the results kept on file. This exercise is a valuable form of training.

Neuropathology, under the charge of Assistant Professor E. E. Southard, is taught as an integral part of the course in general pathology, and has allotted to it the entire afternoons for three weeks in December. These afternoons are occupied by a lecture or talk explanatory of microscopic sections (2-3 P.M.) and by laboratory work (until 5 P.M.) five days in the week. In addition to these required exercises two or three quizzes a week are given (5-6 P.M.) of a wholly voluntary character, in which a review of anatomical considerations and a foretaste of certain clinical considerations are given. These quizzes are given more socratico, and are largely attended. A beginning has been made in the teaching of neuropathological physiology, and for three years voluntary practical exercises have been given at the Danvers Insane Hospital to sections of ten to twelve men each, involving a rapid review of microscopic data of physiological importance and a ward visit in which not morbid entities or symptom-complexes, but signs and symptoms as such, are considered. These Danvers visits are attended by practically all students, each student obtaining about four hours in the laboratory and wards of an insane hospital under guidance.

The topics considered in the lectures and laboratory work of this course include not only those subjects which the general pathologist is unaccustomed to teach (the system diseases and allied subjects), but also certain subjects ordinarily taught in general courses, as epidemic meningitis, tuberculous meningitis, encephalitis, and brain abscess. It is also attempted to give the student some idea of the histopathology of dementia paralytica. In short, the lectures attempt to prepare the student not only for the study of neurology, but also in part for that of psychiatry as well as for portions of other third-year disciplines; and the laboratory work aims, so far as possible, not to become a specialty, but to fit with and in part grow out of the course in general pathology.

In passing, it may be mentioned that extensive use is made of lantern slides in this course, drawn from a collection of about 1,000 dealing with neuropathological subjects.

The microscopic sections are almost all loan specimens. So far as material permits, the lesions are studied from identical or adjacent blocks stained by several methods. Much use, in particular, is made of sections from adjacent blocks of nerve tissue prepared according to the Weigert myeline sheath method and the Marchi method for fat. The infectious processes and vascular diseases are represented in adjacent sections stained; for instance, by eosin and methylene blue, Mallory's aniline blue stain for connective tissue, and Mallory's phosphotungstic acid hematein for neuroglia fibrils. The sets of loan specimens number about ninety, and are being increased or replaced with better examples at a rapid rate. The main plan of the work with microscopic sections is to show the general histological and cytological relations of the nervous system in disease to other organs in disease and to bring out the features of neuropathology rather from the standpoint of the internist and general student than from that of the coming neurological specialist.

Surgical Pathology and the study of animal parasites, which are both included in the general course, are taught by Assistant Professor E. H. Nichols and Professor Theobald Smith, respectively. The former occupies the afternoons of January, and consists of laboratory work with explanatory talks and demonstrations covering the healing of wounds, the processes of repair in the soft tissues, the union of fractures, the diseases of bones and joints, and other subjects of special pathology which are of surgical importance. The lesions studied are further illustrated by a series of clinical lectures at the Boston City Hospital. Professor Smith occupies the mornings of two weeks during January with laboratory exercises and lectures on the animal parasites, especially the Protozoa and the infections produced by them.

FOURTH YEAR ELECTIVES.

The fourth-year electives are taken in units (called "half-courses") of 125 hours. These hours may be distributed over mornings or over afternoons for two months or may be taken all day for a single month. The former plan is usually adopted, since it permits combining the course with other half-courses, as neurology or cognate subjects. The number of units which may be taken by any student is limited only by the length of the year (1,000 hours, or eight units), but, in practice, the student rarely takes over two units, although one student has devoted his entire fourth year to pathology. In the general elective the men are put into the laboratories at the hospitals because of the unusual opportunities afforded them there to see and assist at autopsies and to study tumors and other surgical specimens fresh from the operating amphitheatre. The men are given every opportunity to look up the clinical records of the cases which prove pathologically of interest. This fourth-year elective has, therefore, a very practical bearing, and apparently is much appreciated by the men who take it. As an example of the work done, it may be stated that during the month of March, 1908, one student witnessed and assisted at thirty-two autopsies. He wrote up the post-mortem records of three of these, and also sectioned and stained the tissues from them, and described the histological lesions. He also described and worked up histologically several tumors. He looked up and made an abstract of the clinical history of all the cases of which he made a special study.

When a student devotes half a year or more to pathology, he is expected to present a thesis on some special subject in connection with his work. Valuable contributions are made in this way to the knowledge of special or unusual pathological lesions in man.

In the elective in neuropathology the method of instruction is quite elastic, and varies with the desires and preparedness of the individual students. As the official register (1907-08) states, "Each student is assigned the tissues and protocol of a neuropathological case, the report of which will involve personal employment of the approved technical methods in neuropathology, as well as a variable amount of library work. When elected for more than a month, the course may involve work on a neuropathological problem. The course is intended as preparatory for neurological or psychiatric work or as auxiliary to work on general medicine."

If the student desires more particularly training towards psychiatry, it is possible for him to work at the Danvers Insane Hospital, living in the vicinity. The work then involves: (a) attendance at the daily case-readings of the hospital staff, with analysis and observation of cases presented

(one to three daily); (b) work in the wards upon selected cases; (c) laboratory work.

GRADUATE WORK.

Men who wish to do graduate work in general pathology are put into the laboratories at the School or at the hospitals according to the kind of work they are interested in. The hospital laboratories afford work of practical value, especially to those who are going into practice. At the school laboratory more attention is paid to experimental lines of work. The entire undergraduate course or any part of it and the fourth-year elective are also open to graduate students.

The following courses are especially designed for graduate students:—

1. Diagnosis and classification of tumors. By Professor F. B. Mallory.
2. The inoculable tumors of mice and rats. By Dr. E. E. Tyzzer.
3. Experimental pathology. By Dr. F. P. Gay.
4. Neuropathology. By Assistant Professor E. E. Southard.

The work in this latter course comprises: (a) attendance upon the daily case-readings of the Danvers Insane Hospital staff, with short abstracts and analyses of the cases presented; (b) assigned (or, where possible, more advanced) work in the wards of the Danvers Insane Hospital on the functional side of neuropathology; (c) technical and descriptive work upon some assigned case or cases of neuropathological interest. Working up the material will require the use of most of the classical methods in neuropathological technique. This course is given in October, and repeated in subsequent months of the term, and consists of twenty-five exercises.

A colloquium, participated in by all members of the department and by the graduate students, is held weekly. At this exercise, specimens are shown, subjects are discussed, and important literature reviewed. This has been found a very valuable means of unifying the work of the laboratory, so that the whole gains knowledge and stimulus from the work of each part.

No definite course is arranged in comparative pathology as an elective or for graduate work, but the laboratory, recently generously endowed by the late George F. Fabyan is open throughout the year to advanced and graduate students prepared to carry on original work under the direction of Professor Theobald Smith on problems relating to the spontaneous and induced diseases of animal life, their causes, and the relation of these causes to human diseases. Special facilities for the study of bacterial toxins, antitoxins, and vaccines, are offered to the qualified student.

SUMMER COURSES.

The following summer courses are offered by the department:

- (1) A General Course in Gross and Microscopical Pathology, by Drs. A. R. Robertson and T. Ordway, during June and July.
- (2) Pathological Anatomy and Autopsy Technic, by Dr. Oscar Richardson, during July and August.
- (3) Clinico-pathological Course in Diseases of the Eye, by Dr. F. H. Verhoeff, in August.

PATHOLOGY AS A PROFESSION.

The department offers every opportunity to men who wish to devote their lives to the study of pathology as teachers and investigators. The capable men are taken on as assistants in the laboratories first at the hospitals and then at the School. The well-trained and intelligent men are rapidly called to positions in other hospitals and medical schools because of the great demand for trained laboratory men, and this demand the Pathological Department undertakes to fill, so far as it can get hold of the right kind of men. During the past year over a dozen positions, with salaries ranging from $1,000 to $3,000, have gone begging, owing to a lack of available men to fill the positions. The returns in position and salary to men well trained in pathology at the present time are fair. In the near future they must of necessity improve, owing to the great demand for such men. Following is a partial list of men who have been connected with the Pathological Department, either at the School or at the Boston City Hospital, or at both, and of the positions they now occupy:—

T. Leary, M.D., Professor of Pathology and Bacteriology in the Medical Department of Tufts College.

R. M. Pearce, M.D., Professor of Pathology at New York University and Bellevue Medical School.

E. H. Nichols, M.D., Assistant Professor of Surgical Pathology at the Harvard Medical School.

H. A. Christian, M.D., Assistant Professor in the Theory and Practice of Medicine, Harvard Medical School.

E. E. Southard, M.D., Assistant Professor of Neuropathology, Harvard Medical School.

E. E. Tyzzer, M.D., Director of the Caroline Brewer Croft Cancer Commission, Harvard Medical School.

W. R. Brinckerhoff, M.D., Director of the United States Leprosy Investigation Station at Molokai, Hawaii.

H. S. Steensland, M.D., Lecturer on Pathology, Medical Department of Syracuse University.

R. L. Thompson, M.D., Professor of Pathology, Marion Sims-Beaumont School of Medicine, St. Louis.

RESEARCH AND PUBLICATIONS.

Every man connected with the department is expected to engage in research work. At the hospitals the routine work suggests many of the most interesting problems. At the School more attention is paid to experimental lines of work.

The publications from the department have been numerous and important. They may be briefly summarized as follows: three monographs on the subjects epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis, diphtheria, and smallpox; a text-book on pathological technic; and many papers on the causal agents of certain diseases, such as actinomycosis, Madura foot, Aleppo boil, gonorrhœa, glanders, and scarlet fever; on the histological changes in various pathological processes, such as acute and subacute nephritis, typhoid fever, and necroses of the liver; on bacteriological and microscopical technic; and on tumors in general and gliomata in particular.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PHARMACOLOGY AND THERAPEUTICS.

Definitions for the terms "materia medica," "therapeutics," and "pharmacology" seem necessary in beginning an account of their teaching at Harvard. Pharmacology, or pharmacodynamics, is the science which treats of the action of drugs or of the changes which these produce in living organisms. Therapeutics is the art of healing, and considers the different agents (physical, psychical, dietetic, and medicinal), and their modes of application in the cure or alleviation of disease. Materia medica in its strictest and modern sense describes the physical and chemical properties, botanical origin, etc., of medicinal agents. These terms have frequently been, and are still occasionally misused,—e.g., any one being taken to mean all three,—but in the few words that follow the terms will be used according to these definitions.

Pharmacology, taken in its strictest sense, is, like bacteriology, one of the youngest of the medical sciences. It was well established in Europe in the seventies, and was gradually introduced in America in the eighties. Up to these periods, both abroad and here, the teaching was almost exclusively materia medica and therapeutics. The latter was often illogical because the action was not known, and routine and empiricism governed this art.

Harvard was one of the first schools in this country to take up the study of pharmacology, for in 1884 Dr. Joseph W. Warren gave experimental courses and performed laboratory research in this subject. The teachers occupying the chair of materia medica and therapeutics gradually introduced more and more pharmacological action in their lectures, and in 1894, while Dr. Harrington had charge of the course of therapeutics and materia medica, a demonstrator, Dr. A. Chadbourne, was appointed for the purpose of carrying on pharmacological research and of giving advanced students experimental courses. Dr. Chadbourne having resigned in 1896, Dr. Franz Pfaff was appointed as his successor. He supplemented Dr.

Harrington's course by giving eight demonstrations a year, showing the action of some of the most important drugs. When in 1898 Dr. Harrington resigned from the department of materia medica in order to accept the chair of Hygiene, the title of the Department of Materia Medica and Therapeutics was changed to Pharmacology and Therapeutics, and Dr. Pfaff was placed in charge.

As heretofore during the last ten years, the policy of the department has been to keep abreast of the times with both research and teaching. Each of its members performs experimental research. Other persons especially interested have always been welcome to work in the laboratories.

The present regular winter course given by Drs. Pfaff and Tyrode, with assistants, consists of a series of lectures, demonstrations, and recitations upon pharmacology, materia medica, and therapeutics, besides a small practical course in materia medica.

To illustrate the general system of instruction, the drug atropine may be chosen. First, the student hears a lecture describing its origin, constitution, physical and chemical properties, also that of its kin, as hyoscyamine and scopolamine, the appearances and characteristics of the mother substances belladonna, hyoscyamus, and stramonium. Specimens of the active principles and crude drugs are placed in the hands of the students for inspection and study. This is followed by a lecture on the action of these, accompanied by demonstrations on rabbits showing the paralyzing effect on the vagus, the stimulation of the medullary centres, and the paralysis of the oculo-motor terminations in the iris and ciliary muscles; on frogs, showing the paralysis of the sweat glands of the general nervous system and nerve endings in the eye. The teaching of action is followed by that of therapeutic application or uses, and the rational indications are always explained from the pharmacological activity. Illustrated prescriptions of each drug, with indication, dose, and method of administration, are given to the class. The student is expected to write prescriptions on every drug, and these are corrected weekly and returned for study.

Besides the above instruction, which is given in the second year, there is a course in general therapeutics offered in the third year. This consists of a series of sixteen lectures given by Professor Pfaff upon the treatment of the different organs when diseased. Thus the various affections of the heart are considered, with the therapeutic agents used for their relief. In the same manner are treated the disturbances of the lungs, gastro-intestinal tract, kidneys, skin, nervous system, and of general metabolism.

The summer courses given by Dr. Tyrode are varied. Up to this year a definite course in pharmacology and therapeutics was offered, but it was found by experience that the needs of the participants were always very different, and that other instruction than that scheduled had to be arranged. For instance, every year some professors or other teachers of pharmacology were instructed in methods used in teaching this subject. Other applicants were practitioners of medicine who wished instruction in the treatment of some particular organ, such as the stomach or intestines. Still others were students interested in research. Lastly, elementary students occasionally applied for a concise, general course. In view of these facts no definite plan is scheduled, but by early application arrangements are made for the variety of instruction desired. The instruction given to college professors consists of animal experiments suitable for lecture demonstrations and also for practical courses which are now being introduced in a number of American universities.

It is most encouraging to see the subjects of pharmacology and therapeutics advancing with gigantic strides and making their importance felt more and more, because, after all, the real aim of the study of medicine is to treat and cure patients, when possible. Unfortunately, there was a period of therapeutic nihilism in the world when almost the only interest to the physician was the making of the diagnosis and confirming it by the post-mortem examination. Without undervaluing the great importance of diagnosis and of pathology, it is comforting to see the end of this morbid tendency toward the view that the treatment of the patient was the least factor of interest.

There was a tendency to believe that, unless the finer pathological diagnosis could be made, the treatment was nearly useless. This can be easily refuted by mentioning only two examples. First, diabetes: although we know very little concerning the cause, origin, and pathology of this disease, if on the principles of general therapeutics we recognize that a function is at fault and that this requires rest and graduated exercise, most promising results may be obtained in many cases. Thus, knowing that the body (some unknown cells) has lost the power of oxidizing sugar, we rest this function by withdrawing the sugar and sugar-forming elements from the diet, and, when it has regained some of its power, we gradually increase sugar-forming elements, being careful not to exceed the capacity for oxidation. Second, uncompensated heart diseases: although many clinicians think it of great weight in their treatment to know which valve is affected and whether it is pure regurgitation or whether there is some stenosis, as a matter of fact the important factor is that the heart is incompetent to do its normal work, and that this should be lessened to a minimum by bodily rest and decrease of weight, if excessive, and that the heart muscle should be strengthened by adequate stimulants, as by members of the digitalis group or by graduated exercise, until this organ has made up by increasing its muscular power its lack of efficiency caused by stenosis or leakage.

To know exactly how to use digitalis in heart disease and other drugs in other diseases, a knowledge of their pharmacological action is necessary,—therefore the significant importance of pharmacology in practical therapeutics.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF PHYSICS.

This department has felt profoundly the changes incident to the development of medical education along modern lines.

The newer methods of teaching in this as in other clinical departments has resulted in bringing the students in closer contact with hospital patients, and this has necessitated teaching in small groups with a multiplication of instructors. The closer application of the methods of the general sciences to the study of clinical medicine has wrought another change, in that it has necessitated the development of laboratory instruction within the clinical departments. Feeling this influence, the Department of the Theory and Practice of Physic began to enlarge in 1900, and four new assistants were added, and again in 1903 and in 1905 other assistants were added. In 1907 a laboratory course for second-year students was undertaken, and this necessitated the addition of five more to the teaching staff, so that until the recent resignations of Professor Fitz and Dr. Cutler the department consisted of thirteen teachers, as follows:—

Reginald H. Fitz, M.D., LL.D., Hersey Professor of the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Henry A. Christian, M.D., Assistant Professor of the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Elbridge G. Cutler, M.D., Instructor in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Elliott P. Joslin, M.D., Instructor in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Henry F. Hewes, M.D., Instructor in the Clinical Laboratory.

Arthur K. Stone, M.D., Assistant in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

George S. C. Badger, M.D., Assistant in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Joseph H. Pratt, M.D., Assistant in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

Herman M. Adler, M.D., Assistant in the Clinical Laboratory.

Charles L. Overlander, M.D., Assistant in the Clinical Laboratory.

Francis W. Palfrey, M.D., Assistant in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

William B. Robbins, M.D., Assistant in the Clinical Laboratory.

Roger I. Lee, M.D., Assistant in the Theory and Practice of Physic.

The effort is not made to cover the whole field of medical theory in a series of didactic lectures, but certain topics are selected which, on account of their complexity or the lack of authoritative and established conceptions or practice concerning them, offer especial difficulty to the student, and these are made the subject of lectures at the Medical School. In this way the student acquires a perspective and a sense of relative values. This is strongly supplemented by clinical exercises and ward visits at the Massachusetts General Hospital which have not been essentially changed. Section teaching has been continued at the hospitals with the modification that now the students do not require so much instruction in laboratory methods, since that is supplied in the regular laboratory, and more time can be devoted to history taking, the application of laboratory methods, and the physical examination of patients. The fourth-year elective course which gives to four students each month the privileges of contact with ward patients during an entire month has been continued at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and a similar course has been conducted at the Carney Hospital, in which four men work during the forenoons of two months. Next year both of these courses will be continued, and the number of men taken at the Carney Hospital will be doubled. In addition to their hospital work some of the men will be instructed in the methods of experimental medicine.

The chief addition to the teaching work of the Department during the past two years consists of a course given in the second half of the second year, in which the entire class is instructed in various clinical laboratory methods such as can be used in subsequent clinical work. The students receive instruction daily for a half-term, having two hours each day devoted to this work. It is the purpose of this course to instruct the students, first, in the methods of laboratory investigation, with sufficient practice to insure their ability later to carry out the methods without further instruction, and, second, to bring to their attention the chief changes in the blood, the urine, the fæces, etc., which they are likely to encounter in their subsequent study of patients. This kind of instruction had previously been distributed through several departments of the Medical School, and consequently was very little under the control of the clinical departments. As a result of this, frequently there arose discrepancies in classification and method, the students not having been instructed in those methods preferred by the clinical men in their clinical work, and this was unsatisfactory.

In connection with this laboratory for the routine teaching of second-year students, there has been developed a well-equipped laboratory in which experimental and clinical investigations of various kinds can be made. The laboratory of the department occupies the upper two floors of the Chemical Building, and is at present equipped with facilities for animal experimentation and the subsequent histological, bacteriological, and chemical investigation of tissues and tissue products. Several rooms are equipped for chemical investigation, and it is the purpose of the department next year to increase the facilities for this kind of work. During the year a considerable amount of apparatus has been purchased, and thirty new microscopes have been acquired by the department. A technician for histological work and a boy for the care of animals and preparation of certain material are constantly employed. Here facilities are offered for fourth-year students and for graduates to carry out clinical investigation or to perfect themselves in the more routine methods of the laboratory.

At first thought it might seem that a laboratory under the charge of the Department of the Theory and Practice of Physic involves a needless duplication, since the Departments of Bacteriology, Pathology, Physiology, and Chemistry, are equipped for such work. However, the problems which are to be studied mainly in such a laboratory are borderland problems, and the difficulty in the past had arisen from the fact that no one of the previously mentioned laboratories had sufficient general equipment to meet the needs of a problem which might to-day require the methods of pathology, to-morrow those of chemistry, and at the next phase of the subject might need physiological apparatus. Again, by having a department closely associated with the Clinical Department, it is believed that the clinical application of methods and the clinical aspects of problems will receive closer attention. That there is a need for such facilities for work is clearly shown by the fact that during the past year the facilities of the laboratory proved insufficient for the demand upon them, and it was impossible to furnish working space within the department laboratory for all desiring to work. The resources of the Chemical Department were courteously placed at the disposal of the Department of the Theory and Practice of Physic, and several men worked during the year under the auspices of the latter department in the laboratory of the Chemical Department. However, this involved crowding in the Chemical Department, and it is hoped that next year these places in the Chemical Laboratory will be left free to be filled by the growing work of that department, and the facilities for all applying for work can be furnished in the laboratory of the Department of the Theory and Practice of Physic.

In addition to the laboratory at the Medical School the department has maintained at the Massachusetts General Hospital and at the Carney Hospital laboratories for fourth-year students, and also has furnished laboratory supplies for section teaching at the Massachusetts General and Boston City Hospitals and at the House of the Good Samaritan.

Since the inauguration of the laboratory, members of the department and graduate students working under their direction have completed and published forty papers. Eleven additional pieces of work have been completed, but remain unpublished, while eleven other studies are partially completed. Without detailing the subjects of these contributions, it may be of interest to state that they represent a rather wide range of subjects. There have been some bacteriological studies, particularly several associated with the problem of typhoid fever. Several papers have been histopathological studies, either of lesions in man or lesions produced experimentally in animals. The chemical study of fæces has engaged the attention of several workers, while chemical problems associated with diabetes and nephritis have occupied others. At present several problems similar to those already cited are being studied, and in addition some investigations of experimental nephritis and problems associated with the occurrence of intestinal parasites and their lesions are being carried on.

It is believed that with the development of increased facilities for work in this laboratory a larger number of the recent graduates of the Medical School resident in Boston or vicinity, as well as graduates from other institutions, may be induced to undertake the laboratory study of such problems as are closely associated with clinical work and which may be controlled by and serve as controls of observations made directly on patients in the wards. It will be the purpose of the department to gather in its laboratory equipment suitable for the study of such problems from several points of view, and this will necessitate having the apparatus and reagents for chemical, bacteriological, pathological, and physiological methods of study, but such investigation will in no wise replace the work which has been done, and which will be done, in the laboratories of these other departments.

This year marks the end of Dr. Fitz's active connection with the School. It is not anticipated that his withdrawal will result in any very marked changes in the methods of the department. Under his direction it has developed along the lines already outlined, and much of the future development of the department has been anticipated in the broad-minded policy inaugurated by him. Dr. Fitz's sixty-fifth birthday, May 5, 1908, a period which determined his retirement from the visiting staff of the Massachusetts General Hospital, was made the occasion of the publication of a volume in his honor, consisting of papers by the members of the Department of Theory and Practice and his former house pupils at the hospital. This has been published as a special number of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, and in addition in the form of a Festschrift volume.

THE DEPARTMENT OF CLINICAL MEDICINE.

The personnel of the department is as follows:—

Frederick C. Shattuck, M.D., Jackson Professor of Clinical Medicine.

George G. Sears, M.D., Assistant Professor of Clinical Medicine.

Richard C. Cabot, M.D., Assistant Professor of Clinical Medicine.

Herman F. Vickery, M.D., Instructor in Clinical Medicine.

Henry Jackson, M.D., Instructor in Clinical Medicine.

They are assisted, especially in section work, by John W. Bartol, M.D.

James M. Jackson, M.D.

William H. Smith, M.D.

Wilder Tileston, M.D.

• Franklin W. White, M.D.
William H. Robey, Jr., M.D.

Edwin A. Locke, M.D.
Frederick T. Lord, M.D.

All the changes in the Department of Clinical Medicine during the past ten years have tended in one direction; namely, to give the students more direct contact with cases of disease and more direct supervision by their teachers.

Ten years ago we had amphitheatre clinics, a rather small number of exercises in auscultation and percussion, and the clinical conference, at which a student read an account of a case studied by himself and was criticised by the instructors and by his classmates. The number of amphitheatre clinics is about the same now. If anything, it has been somewhat increased, but the teaching in "auscultation and percussion" has now been broadened out into teaching on "physical diagnosis," and the amount of time spent upon this subject has considerably increased. Further, the effective value of this time is much greater, owing to the fact that the number of students per teacher is much smaller,—men working in sections of six or eight. This section work in the examination of cases has taken the place, largely, of the ward visits which we used to have,—visits in which a large body of students trailed along through the wards at the heels of their teacher, who did what he could for them at a great disadvantage, since only a few of the students could actually feel, see, and hear what was of interest in the case under demonstration. In Dr. Shattuck's amphitheatre clinics the students now have a much better chance to study the cases at close range, as groups of men are constantly leaving the seats and getting in touch with the patient on the floor of the amphitheatre, under Dr. W. H. Smith's supervision. The clinical conference has been given up, and its place is now taken by a thesis written in the fourth year and handed in for criticism.

The fourth-year elective in clinical medicine is planned, like all the other electives, on the "block system." This means that each student studies one subject, and that only, for one, two, or three months at a time. The work is so planned as to fill his whole day. On this work his examination has been (until this year) wholly a practical examination. That is, he has received his mark, with the exception of a few per cent. upon his thesis, wholly upon the basis of what he does in the clinical work assigned to him in the different out-patient departments and in the wards of the Massachusetts General Hospital. Having been led up through the second and third years with section work, clinics, and classes, the student now is "turned loose," so to speak, in his fourth year as an assistant in one of the out-patient clinics of the Boston City or Massachusetts General Hospitals. To these positions men are assigned for one, two, or three months, and their year's mark depends largely upon the work they do there.

By this system it is insured that all, or nearly all, the students get the benefit of that practical work as a clinical assistant which a few of them have always had in the past.

No man is allowed to do this work until the fourth year; that is, no man can cut his third-year work in order to get experience in an out-patient clinic, but practically every man now gets such experience both in the summers and as part of the fourth-year elective system.

Most important in making this out-patient work of value to the student is the supervision and guidance furnished by an instructor who is not burdened with the management of the clinic itself. One of the things that we have learned in the past decade is that it is not possible to do justice both to the management of a clinic and to the instruction of students in that clinic. One or the other is sure to suffer. Under the present management the physician in charge of the clinic need pay no special attention to the teaching of his assistants. He is therefore free to do his duty by the patients.

Another most important innovation secured within the past two years at the Massachusetts General Hospital is the introduction of fourth-year men as "clinical clerks" in the wards. This was begun by the Department of Theory and Practice under Dr. Christian, and, when the Hospital authorities were convinced that no harm was done to the patients, while great good accrued for the student, a similar system was undertaken by the Department of Clinical Medicine in the east medical wards. Four men are assigned to each ward each month, and there, under the supervision of their instructor, they take histories, examine patients, and work up the body fluids for diagnostic purposes.

This work is very much appreciated by the students, and gives them something of the same benefit that results from an interne's service, enough perhaps to prove to the student that it is an absolute necessity for him to get more of this same work before he begins to practise his profession.

After trying for a couple of years the experiment of marking the fourth-year men wholly on their clinical work, we have this year gone back to a written examination paper, although this counts only a relatively small part in the total year's mark.

Two other innovations introduced within the last three years have received the name of

- (1) Case-teaching;
- (2) Clinical-pathological exercises.

In the case-teaching exercise, which is given at the Medical School without the presence of any patients, printed cases, similar to those which used to be put upon the fourth-year examination, are discussed with the students. This exercise is essentially one in reasoning from data assumed to be correct. How to work up these data into reasonably accurate diagnosis, prognosis, and treatment, how to group symptoms to form a disease, how to group in one's mind the ordinary causes of common symptoms, such as headache or dyspnoea, are learned to a certain extent in these exercises, which take the form of a quiz, the students doing most of the talking and asking as well as answering many questions. At the end of the exercises the diagnosis is announced, and the students' mistakes discussed. The exercise is a very popular one, and seems to serve as a general review of medicine from a point of view slightly differing from that to which the students are accustomed.

In the clinical pathological exercise the autopsy material from all the autopsies which have occurred during the past week is saved on ice and collected at the hour of exercise. The data of the history, physical examination and daily course of each case, have been previously copied out from the hospital record, and are read to the students by the instructor, who is as ignorant as they as to the actual outcome of the case, and knows nothing of the autopsy findings. He discusses with them the probable diagnosis of the case, commits himself and them to a definite and detailed diagnosis, which is then confronted with the actual post-mortem findings as they are demonstrated to the students by the pathologist. After this any discrepancies between the clinical and the anatomical diagnosis are talked over, and the possible methods of avoiding them in the future are considered. This exercise, which originated at the Harvard Medical School, has since been copied and adopted in New York and Baltimore schools.

The principles governing all these changes and guiding the department in its outlook for the future are essentially as follows:—

1. Students learn chiefly by what they themselves do, either with their hands or their heads. They learn far less from what they hear.

2. Next to the actual practice of the activities, mental or manual, which it is desired they shall acquire, students learn most by watching the work of their teachers. This they have an opportunity to do in the amphitheatre clinics and to a certain extent in the fourth-year out-patient work.

3. So far no attempt has been made to cover systematically the whole field of medicine, as other Medical Schools do through their didactic lectures, recitations, or quizzes. Whether this policy is, on the whole, the wisest one, only time can show.

THE DEPARTMENT OF PEDIATRICS.

Twenty years ago, in the Harvard Medical School, a department devoted to the study of children, or even any especial teaching in connection with children, was practically unknown. A professor of medicine would occasionally say a few words about measles or tubercular meningitis, but no differences in the manifestations of disease in early and in adult life, nor the influence of age on the symptoms of a disease, were at that time referred to, and no examination was given in special connection with the diseases of early life.

Then a new era opened, and a phenomenal rapidity of growth and expansion was witnessed in the Harvard curriculum in connection with the special instruction in children's diseases. At first the course was termed "Diseases of Children," but this was soon seen to be an improper term for this branch of medicine, and the title became "Diseases in Children." It was, indeed, explained by those who were interested in this branch that there were no diseases peculiar to children, but that, when a disease occurred in children, it was in almost every instance the same disease as manifested itself in adults, and that, therefore, it being the especial manifestations in a child of a disease occurring also at other ages, the title naturally should be "Diseases in Children" rather than "Diseases of Children."

The next step was the assertion by these same teachers that, in order to understand properly disease as it occurs in early life, the actual normal conditions of different periods of development should be first carefully studied and thoroughly understood. A human being's growth from birth to adolescence presents such kaleidoscopic changes from month to month and from year to year that this study of the development of normal children was soon seen to be of greater and greater importance, and to require more and more time and preliminary instruction. Stated hours of instruction were therefore given by the teachers of Pediatrics in the beginning of the course, presenting to the student the anatomical and physiological conditions which are peculiar to early life. It was explained also that the development of young human beings during the first year of life, and their anatomical and physiological conditions, was so different from the second year—the second year being an intermediary stage of anatomical and physiological pictures between the first year and the third year, and, again, the third year differing so greatly from the first two, and indeed presenting an entirely new phase of child life—that it was found to be best to teach that the earlier periods, especially the first year, would best be designated by the term "Infancy": the second year, as being more closely allied, especially in its first half or three-quarters, to the first year, and a borderland between the first and third year, was included in this term.

As has just been stated, the third year shows a well-marked picture of its own, and a human being may then well be called a child. During the remaining ten years, up to adolescence (perhaps to the twelfth year or the thirteenth or fourteenth years, according to the part of the world in which these young human beings live, whether in southern or northern climates), progressive changes take place. The student was taught that, having once mastered the different periods of development in infancy and childhood, he was then prepared to understand the abnormal conditions which might occur in any of his patients during any part of these two periods, infancy and childhood, and that the characteristics of normal conditions in the various stages of development would result in modifying the symptoms of disease according to the stage of development at which the disease occurred. Marked instances of this were brought before the student when he was shown cases of pneumonia in early life, and the symptoms which arise according to the different stages of development of the pulmonary tissue; also, in such infections as typhoid fever and tuberculosis. In this manner he was taught by degrees that the study of diseases in children meant the study of clinical medicine in early life as distinct from the clinical medicine of later life and old age.

The teachers in the department then went still further, and had the name of the department changed from "Diseases in Children" to "Pediatrics," meaning by this word, derived from the Greek, the medical and hygienic treatment of children. As more and more work was done in the department, the importance of the subject impressed itself more and more on the Faculty of Medicine. The teacher in control of the department began to teach with the title of "Clinical Instructor." As more hours were taken up in the curriculum with the teaching of "Health and Disease in Early Life," the position of Clinical Instructor was changed in its title to that of "Instructor," and an assistant was appointed. As time went on and as more and more instruction was given, still other assistants had to be added, and after a certain number of years a Chair devoted to Pediatrics was instituted in the Faculty, the title at first being "Assistant Professor of Diseases in Children," and later "Assistant Professor of Pediatrics." Five years later the title of Assistant Professor was changed to full Professor, and the Department of Pediatrics was placed on a level with the other older departments represented in the Faculty.

It has previously been said that the growth of the Department of Pediatrics was phenomenal. It was not only phenomenal in the amount of attention which was paid to it, but also in the appreciation which the students showed of the great value which they felt would come to them, on entering into their life's work in the practice of medicine, to obtain before starting on their career a thorough knowledge of disease as it occurs in early life. They were told what is true, that, when a young physician takes his degree and enters into practice, over and over again it is the case that it is the children of the family to whom he is called, and through whom he gains a foothold in practice and the first step toward the attainment of his medical ambitions.

Again, unwonted opportunities have offered themselves to those who were interested in the teaching of Pediatrics at Harvard in comparison with the advantages which were given in the other large cities and other prominent medical schools of the country. It was found possible to obtain complete control of most of the medical institutions whose work was to take care of young human beings in their first twelve years of existence. Just as teachers in the department held that disease as it appeared in infancy differed as much from disease as it appeared in childhood, as disease in childhood differed from disease in adults, so they held that, if complete justice were to be obtained for the proper care of infants in an institution, that institution should be devoted to infants alone, and that this meant a hospital which should care for young human beings in the first two years of life, and that after the second year, and up to twelve years, children should be treated in a hospital of their own and separate from an institution which devoted itself to older individuals.

It was very evident, from experience, that, whenever these divisions were not made, children suffered for want of proper treatment when they were placed in an institution with adults, and in like manner that infants suffered for want of proper treatment adapted especially to their own early period of development whenever they were taken care of in an institution which also opened its wards to children.

This fact being accepted by those who have made a special study of children, it has been, of course, of the greatest value to the Department, and of the greatest assistance in developing it, to have had an Infants' Hospital and a Children's Hospital always at its command for teaching. Further than this, land has been bought for a new model Infants' Hospital to be called "The Thomas Morgan Rotch, Jr., Memorial Hospital for Infants," and directly next to it, for a new Children's Hospital, designed and elaborated by the teachers in the Pediatric Department, and in close juxtaposition to the new Harvard Medical School buildings. The advantages which now are and will be given to the student of Pediatrics are already fully appreciated by the students in the School, and especially by graduates who come from long distances under the advice of physicians who have made a study of what advantages can be obtained from the different medical schools of the country.

The teaching in the Pediatric Department is assigned to the third and fourth years. In the third year teaching is done by the department every day in the school year from October 1 to June 1. In the beginning of the year the normal anatomy and physiology of the different stages of development during the first twelve or thirteen years of life is taught in concise lectures. These lectures serve as a groundwork for the whole course, and are followed by special lectures on the three great subjects which are most connected with the diseases of early life:—

First. Feeding.

Second. The common contagious diseases,—scarlet fever, measles, varicella, and diphtheria.

Third. Gastro-enteric diseases as they appear in infancy and the early years of childhood.

These lectures are then followed by preliminary lectures on other subjects, usually covering all diseases which have shown themselves to be of peculiar significance in infancy and in childhood. These didactic lectures are also illustrated with screen pictures shown by means of the epidiascope. In addition to these didactic lectures is a course of clinical lectures where one or two students are made to examine, and all the students are encouraged to discuss one or two cases. A certain number of recitations are given in connection with these subjects where careful memorizing is needed. These recitations cover chiefly the normal anatomical and physiological conditions of early life, and some special subjects which cannot be so well taught in lectures. Following the recitations, quite a large number of exercises in connection with "case teaching" are given to the students, especially as preparatory to differential diagnosis at the bedside. These exercises also enable the student to become familiar with written cases, and thus to be able to discuss the clinical case which they expect to receive at the end of their third year on their examination paper, the successful passing of this examination for the third-year students being necessary for them to become regular fourth-year students. The remainder of the teaching in the third year is given in sections by the bedside, and the wards of the Infants' Hospital and of the Children's Hospital, with their respective large out-patient clinics, are used daily for this purpose.

Pediatrics is an elective study in the fourth year, but it is very significant that so large a proportion of the students elect Pediatrics that the department depends upon practically the whole class to become assistants in the two hospitals during the year. These men are placed in the out-patient department, and are expected to be there just as much as is any other regular assistant in the Hospital. In this way they are taught much that is practical, and also to assume responsibility earlier than under the system of simply attending clinics, or ward visits, which formerly was in vogue. These fourth-year men also have a subject assigned to them which they must thoroughly study and investigate, and on which part of their mark in the fourth year in Pediatrics depends. That is, they are required to write a thesis on a given subject, and this thesis, together with such rank as they, according to the opinion of the various instructors, attain in their ward work, represents the examination in Pediatrics in the fourth year. These fourth-year elective students are taught every day throughout the whole day, or as many days or as many months as they elect to take. In this way, if desired, a student can devote his entire time during the fourth year to Pediatrics, and can obtain all-day instruction throughout the year.

In addition to the undergraduate teaching, the teaching for graduates has been improved and extended to a great degree. A graduate can now come to the Harvard Medical School and apply to the Department of Pediatrics, and have continuous teaching every day for the whole day from the first of October to the first of June. The material controlled by the Pediatric Department is sufficient to provide for all the needs and desires of the third-year students, the fourth-year students, and the graduates. Especial advantages are given to the graduate, so that he may elect not only the subject of Pediatrics, but any part of that subject, and can receive advanced teaching or any kind of teaching that he wishes in the wards of the two Hospitals. In this way he can spend a great deal of his time on the subject of infant feeding, or again on the diseases of any stage of childhood. He has only to specify what branch of the subject he especially wishes to devote himself to and perfect himself in, and an especial instructor in Pediatrics who is well posted in that especial subject is placed at his command. He has free entrance into the wards of the hospitals at all reasonable times of the day, and he is asked to criticise the treatment which he finds is being given to the special subject, and is always gladly heard when his ideas differ from those of the Instructor.

In regard to the teaching force of the Pediatric Department, it is owing to the far-seeing liberality of the Harvard Faculty, and to their intelligent insight into what the department needs to encourage the students to take advantage of the broad opportunities for learning which are at their command, that the department finds, for the first time in twenty years, that it is unhampered by too small a number of instructors to cover the ground which the head of the department has laid out.

The corps of instructors, as it now stands, is as follows: Dr. T. M. Rotch is Professor of Pediatrics. Dr. J. H. McCollom is Assistant Professor of Contagious Diseases in the Pediatric Department. The duties of Professor McCollom, who has charge of the contagious wards of the South Department of the Boston City Hospital, are teaching, under the general supervision of the Professor of Pediatrics, scarlet fever, measles, diphtheria, and any other contagious diseases which occur in a child when they happen to appear in his contagious wards. It is also to be noted, however, that different kinds of contagious diseases, whether they be syphilis, or measles or varicella, or scarlet fever or diphtheria, or pertussis or mumps, are all quite frequently met with at both the Infants' and the Children's Hospital, and that in the Children's Hospital, at present, there are being constructed more extensive accommodations for contagious diseases than they have ever had before.

The other members of the teaching force of the department are: John L. Morse, M.D., Assistant Professor of Pediatrics; Maynard Ladd, M.D., Instructor in Pediatrics; George A. Craigin, M.D., Clinical Instructor in Pediatrics; Charles H. Dunn, M.D., Assistant in Pediatrics; Henry I. Bowditch, M.D., Assistant in Pediatrics. They are all connected with both the hospitals, so that they can be interchanged between the hospitals in their services whether in the wards or in the out-patient clinics,—an arrangement which is of great practical importance for the successful administration of the department.

A very important fact connected with the increase in the graduate teaching in the Pediatric Department is that the heads of the department have, for some time, made a special point of letting graduates throughout the country know that a graduate may write and ask for any branch of the teaching of Pediatrics which he desires, and that he invariably receives the answer that it can be given to him; also, that the time or place, or number of hours or days or weeks or months, are at his command according to what he himself thinks will be of most aid to him. The officers of the department are also instructed, under all circumstances, never to tell a graduate that he cannot have the instruction which he wants, but to at once refer him to the head of the department, who is nearly invariably able to provide for his wants, since his assistants are always ready, by working to their utmost capacity, to see that all promises of the head of the department are carried out.

In a word, the teaching in the Pediatric Department has increased more than tenfold in the past ten years, and is ready to bear comparison with the teaching in the Pediatric Department of any university in the country, and, what is more, with the instruction which may be obtained anywhere abroad.

DEPARTMENT OF SURGERY.

The general plan of instruction in surgery now in force at the Harvard Medical School has been a matter of gradual development, and is radically different from that which was considered satisfactory twenty years ago. Methods of instruction have been altered gradually from year to year to meet the changing conditions of surgical knowledge and practice and the more modern methods of teaching, but the sum of these changes has resulted in radical departures from the methods of surgical teaching formerly in vogue.

The medical student of to-day begins his study of surgery in the middle of his second year. In the year and a half of instruction in the School before this time he has been led to acquire a knowledge of the essential principles of chemistry, anatomy and histology, physiology and bio-chemistry, pathology and bacteriology.

The second-year student's first introduction to surgery consists of a series of laboratory exercises in surgical pathology, which are supplemented and illustrated by clinics at the Boston City Hospital. These exercises are intended to give to the student a working knowledge of pathological phenomena which are of interest and importance in surgery. The student is obliged to study and identify microscopic specimens and preparations of the tissues characteristic of surgical lesions, such as sepsis, wound-healing, osteomyelitis and tumors, and in the clinics at the City Hospital illustrative cases showing these lesions are demonstrated. This course occupies the afternoons of the month of January, with three morning clinics each week, and is in charge of Assistant Professor E. H. Nichols. A practical examination is held at the end of the month, and the mark received is counted in the general mark of the student for his surgery examination.

In February of the second year the systematic course in surgery begins. This course is intended to make the student familiar with the general principles and practice of surgery. The course lasts until the middle of the third year,—eight months of instruction,—and the time is about equally divided between the exercises at the Medical School and the clinics at the Massachusetts General Hospital and at the Boston City Hospital.

It is not expected that competent surgeons will be turned out at the end of a year's work, but it is intended that a broad general knowledge of the principles and practice of surgery may be secured, which will serve as a foundation for the more advanced elective courses of the fourth year. The backbone of this elementary instruction in surgery is a series of lectures upon surgical subjects delivered at the Medical School by Professors Maurice H. Richardson and Herbert L. Burrell and their assistants,—Instructors C. A. Porter, J. B. Blake, H. A. Lothrop, and R. B. Greenough. These lectures take up the more important surgical subjects in turn, beginning with asepsis and antisepsis, trauma, hemorrhage, surgical infections, fractures and dislocations, the diseases of blood-vessels, lymphatics, nerves, etc. Later in the course abdominal surgery, the surgery of the head, of the breast, and of other special organs, are considered.

This series of lectures has been spoken of as the backbone of the instruction in surgery, because a large number and variety of other exercises are given in special relation to these lectures. Demonstrations of the pathological material in the Warren Museum and demonstrations of experimental surgery of a physiological or pathological character are given to illustrate such subjects as fractures, the diseases of blood-vessels, and the diseases of the digestive tract. Clinical lectures at the hospitals are given by Professor Richardson and Dr. Porter at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and by Professor Burrell and Drs. Blake and Lothrop at the Boston City Hospital. The enormous amount and variety of clinical material available in these two hospitals make it possible to illustrate with actual cases the great majority of the subjects considered in the systematic lectures, and the clinical exercises are arranged to follow closely upon and amplify and illustrate the systematic lectures at the School. Finally, once a week or oftener, recitations are held at the Medical School by Drs. Lothrop and Greenough. In these exercises the student's understanding of the various subjects covered is ascertained, and an opportunity is given him to ask questions and clear up subjects about which he is in doubt. As a part of these exercises, a syllabus of the more important features of each disease is constructed on the blackboard as rapidly as the student's answers are obtained, in order that the rest of the class may be sure to understand the subject thoroughly.

As an illustration of the way in which this method of instruction works, we will say that dislocation of the shoulder-joint is the subject of a lecture on Monday afternoon. On Tuesday a demonstration is given of the specimens of dislocation in the Warren Museum, with lantern-slides showing the X-rays and photographs of cases of dislocation. This subject is further illustrated by a demonstration on the cadaver of the anatomy and reduction of a dislocation of the shoulder artificially produced. On Wednesday at the Boston City Hospital and on Friday at the Massachusetts General Hospital clinical lectures are given on the subject of dislocations, and illustrative cases are shown to demonstrate the clinical symptoms, treatment, and complications of these injuries. Finally, on Friday afternoon a recitation on dislocations is held, the essential features of the dislocations of different bones are brought out by questioning the student, and a syllabus upon this subject is prepared.

The number of hours devoted to this systematic course in surgery from the middle of the second to the end of the third year is as follows:—

Second year, second half: 4 hours a week school, 4 hours a week hospital.

Third year, first half: 3 hours a week school, 2 hours a week hospital.

Third year, second half: 3 hours a week hospital.

The hospital exercises continue through to the end of the third year.

In addition to this main series of systematic lectures, clinics, and recitations, a number of supplementary exercises in surgical subjects are required. A laboratory course in surgical technic is given by Dr. H. A. Lothrop. These exercises are given to the class in sections, two hours daily for two weeks, and the student is taught the uses of surgical material, sepsis and antisepsis, bandages, splints, instruments, sterilizing methods, and the essential details of the conduct of surgical operations. This course is intended to provide the student with a working knowledge of surgical methods as a pre-requisite to the one month of service as a dresser in the surgical out-patient departments of the Massachusetts General or Boston City Hospitals, which is required for a degree. A reciprocal arrangement between the hospitals and the School now makes it possible and necessary for every student to serve satisfactorily as a surgical dresser for at least one month during his second or third year after he has received his instruction in surgical technic. By this means, also, the hospitals are provided with a certain number of surgical dressers every month throughout the year. During this required month of out-patient service the student receives the practical instruction in anæsthesia required for the degree.

At the beginning of the third year in the School, in addition to the systematic lectures, clinics, and recitations, a number of demonstrations of the surgical anatomy of the abdomen, head, chest, etc., are given by Professor Richardson as a part of the regular course. At this time, also, instruction in genito-urinary surgery and Orthopedics is begun. The course in genito-urinary surgery consists of nine lectures at the Medical School by Dr. Paul Thorndike, and is supplemented by one week of section work for each student in the genito-urinary clinic at the Boston Dispensary during the second half year. Orthopedic surgery is taught by a series of twenty-four exercises under the charge of Professor Bradford, either at the School or at the Children's Hospital.

During the first half of the third year general surgical ward classes are given at the Massachusetts General Hospital and at the Boston City Hospital to sections of the class, each student receiving thirty-two hours of such instruction. Major surgical cases before and after operation are demonstrated or assigned to the student for demonstration, and operations on cases which have been examined are observed. During this period the student is given a special opportunity to follow the treatment of leg fractures and other non-operative cases requiring ward treatment.

In the middle of the third year the student presents himself for examination in surgery. This examination is partly practical and partly written. The practical examination consists of orthopedic surgery, surgical technic, and an oral examination in general surgery. The written examination is in general and orthopedic surgery. During the last half of the third year, exercises in surgery continue under the designation of clinical surgery and case teaching. Clinical lectures at the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Boston City Hospital are given three times a week by Professor Richardson and Professor Burrell. These clinics are free of any restrictions in the way of following and illustrating other lectures, and accordingly give an opportunity for a broad general review of surgical subjects, with more advanced instruction on special subjects of particular importance. During this second half-year a series of thirty-two exercises in "case-teaching" is given at the Medical School by Dr. J. B. Blake. Records of actual cases are here presented for discussion by the class, and differential diagnoses and treatment are especially considered.

At the end of the third year the student is given a further examination in so-called clinical surgery and genito-urinary surgery, and this again consists partly of written and partly of practical work in the examination and diagnosis of a case at the hospital.

At this time a student who has attended the exercises open to him, and who has supplemented his instruction with collateral reading in one or more of the text-books recommended by the department, may be expected to have acquired a sound, fundamental knowledge of the elementary principles of surgery sufficient for the general education of a practitioner of medicine. The student who desires to enter upon the actual practice of surgery himself, however, is expected to elect at least one, and in all probability two, month of elective surgery in his fourth year, and to take a surgical appointment in a hospital.

Instruction in surgery during the fourth year is based upon the "concentration" principle. The student is assigned to the department of surgery for a whole month or for two months, and no other department has any claim during this period upon his energies. The class is thus divided into small sections, and the opportunity for practical work in surgery is very great. The students are divided between the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Boston City Hospital for the morning work. Two or three men are usually assigned to the Relief Station, where they serve as dressers continuously from morning until night during their month of service, and see and treat the great variety of emergency cases which come to a municipal hospital. At the Boston City Hospital a similar assignment of a certain number of men to one or another service as dressers has been made during the past year. The students receiving this assignment serve as clinical clerks in the wards and assist at dressings and operations, take histories and examine patients, keep a daily record of the cases coming under observation, and report upon these cases, after they have covered a certain amount of text-book reading, to one of the instructors.

The fourth-year men assigned to the Massachusetts General Hospital have been under the charge of a special instructor, Dr. R. M. Green, appointed for this purpose. At 9 A.M. the students report to Dr. Green at the hospital, and are taken to the wards and assigned cases for examination and diagnosis, which they are required to demonstrate before the instructor. They are given the privileges of all of the surgical wards, and every case of interest during their month's assignment is available to them. Accident-room cases and autopsies are also attended, and operations on special cases which they have examined. The entire morning is spent in this work, with the exception of an exercise of from one to two hours daily by one of the Senior instructors on special subjects of more than elementary interest. These exercises are of the nature of lectures, clinics, quizzes, or demonstrations, and at least three hours a week are devoted to personal instruction by Professor Richardson. The afternoons of the fourth-year students who are not on continuous service as dressers at the City or Relief Hospitals are divided between a course in operative surgery at the Medical School, under Dr. George H. Monks, and exercises at the Massachusetts General or the Children's Hospitals. Operative surgery is taught in a series of demonstrations, and practical exercises upon the cadaver by the student, occupying the afternoons for two weeks. The classical operations are performed, and special attention is given to minor surgical details, such as sutures, incisions, the ligature of arteries, and amputations. The exercises upon the cadaver have this year been supplemented by two exercises in operative surgery on living anæsthetized animals in the Laboratory of Surgical Research, the animals not being permitted to recover from the anæsthetic. Each student who elects two months in surgery is entitled to this course in operative surgery on animals.

The afternoons of the remainder of the month are spent either at the Children's or at the Massachusetts General Hospitals. At the Children's Hospital the students are assigned as dressers, under the instruction of Dr. J. S. Stone, and serve in the Out-patient Department four afternoons a week, on the General Surgical Service. Cases are assigned to them for examination and treatment, and the results of their observations are controlled by the instructor. Special investigations and reports upon the surgical literature of such subjects as hernia, tubercular glands of neck, etc., are also required.

At the Massachusetts General Hospital the afternoon exercises consist of laboratory work in surgical pathology, both gross and microscopic, the study and interpretation of X-ray plates, hydrotherapeutics, mechanical therapeutics, and lantern demonstrations, by one of the instructors. Each student has also been permitted to accompany Professor Richardson in attendance on private patients.

Each fourth-year man who elects two months in surgery is expected also to present a thesis, and assistance is given him toward the preparation and arrangement of his paper and the use of medical literature in looking up a surgical subject in the library. The mark of the student for his work in elective surgery in the fourth year is based partly upon a practical examination and partly upon his ability as shown by his work throughout the month.

Elective courses in Surgical Pathology, Clinical Surgical Pathology, Genito-urinary Surgery, and Orthopedic Surgery, are also available for the fourth-year work. The course in clinical surgical pathology occupies the mornings for two months, and is under Dr. W. F. Whitney. The student follows the clinical cases submitted to operation at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and assists in the laboratory in the examination of the gross and microscopic specimens derived from operations. A number of supplementary exercises in gross pathology in the Warren Museum are also given.

The course in Surgical Pathology is under Professor E. H. Nichols, and occupies the students' afternoons for two months of the year. This course is intended for advanced students, and is devoted especially to research, along the lines permitted by the great variety of surgical material sent into the Laboratory of Surgical Pathology, and already collected in the Museum attached to this department.

Orthopedic Surgery electives are described in detail in another place. The elective courses in genito-urinary surgery occupy the forenoon hours for two consecutive months, and are given chiefly at the City Hospital, under Dr. F. S. Watson and Dr. Paul Thorndike. The student is given the opportunity to assist in the diagnosis and treatment of minor genito-urinary cases in the Out-patient Department and to witness the operative treatment and after-care of cases in the house service. Conferences with the instructors are held from time to time, and the student is obliged to report upon the cases he has followed and to read up the subjects which have been considered.

For the instruction of the student who desires to become a surgeon the selection of fourth-year electives recommended by the department is as follows:—

Medicine: 2 half-courses (2 months).

Surgery: 2 half-courses (2 months).

Genito-urinary Surgery: 1 half-course.

Anatomy: 1 half-course.

Gynæcology, Clinical Surgical Pathology, } 2 half-courses.
Surgical Pathology or Orthopedics: }

If this selection of electives is made and the work of the different courses conscientiously performed, it is felt by the department that a knowledge of surgery should be obtained sufficient to serve as a good foundation for the practical experience and development of the house officer's service at a general hospital, without which no surgical training can be said to be complete.

ORTHOPEDIC SURGERY.

The development of the teaching of orthopedic surgery in the School has kept pace with the development in this country of this special branch of surgical work, and it is to be remembered that Boston has deservedly held high rank as the birth-place of this specialty, and maintains a position in the forefront of its advancement. The first surgeon to devote especial attention in this country to the treatment of deformity was Dr. John B. Brown, of Boston, who, after resigning his position as surgeon at the Massachusetts General Hospital, devoted himself to the treatment of spinal deformities especially. He was the first in this community to perform the operation of tenotomy on the tendo-Achilles shortly after the report of the performance by Delpech. Although he was ahead of his time in this undertaking, his example was followed by his son, Dr. Buckminster Brown, who was the first to establish a ward for the treatment of orthopedic cases in any hospital. At the Samaritan Hospital a ward was opened for the treatment of cases of deformity, and this institution has since continued to pay especial attention to the care of these cases. Dr. Buckminster Brown, after becoming the most successful exponent of English orthopedic surgery in this country, founded a professorship at the Harvard Medical School, and left a valuable collection of casts and specimens, which not only attest to the thoroughness of his work in the correction of club-foot, but also serves as a nucleus for the orthopedic collection in the Warren Museum, which is at present one of the most extensive and valuable in the country. It will be recalled also that the best exposition in English of orthopedic surgery of the day was furnished by the prize essay of the distinguished Professor of Surgery at our School,—Dr. Henry J. Bigelow.

The teaching of orthopedic surgery as a specialty at the Harvard Medical School began in 1880, by the establishment of voluntary courses which were given to members of the fourth year. In response to the interest shown by the students in these lectures and in the valuable clinical material at the disposal of the School in the out-patient department and wards of the Boston Children's Hospital, a required course was established, and subsequently enlarged and developed, so that at present the opportunities offered for instruction in this specialty are ample. Dr. Edward H. Bradford is Professor of Orthopedic Surgery, and Drs. Robert W. Lovett, Elliot G. Brackett, and Joel E. Goldthwait are Instructors, and Dr. Augustus Thorndike is an Assistant in this branch. The required course for all students is given in the third year, and consists of lectures and clinical exercises once a week for the first half-year. An elective course in the fourth year gives those students who wish to specialize a chance to make use of the very extensive clinical opportunities afforded by the Children's, the Massachusetts General, the Carney, the Long Island, and the Samaritan Hospitals. Opportunities for further research are offered by graduates and summer courses. Many physicians from various parts of the country are yearly enrolled in these courses, and an A.M. degree may be given to special students in recognition of conspicuous work, as in a recent case of a student from another university who devoted a year of post-graduate work to the study of orthopedics, and produced a valuable and original thesis on "High Position of the Scapula."

THE DEPARTMENT OF OBSTETRICS AND GYNÆCOLOGY.

The most conspicuous recent event in this department is the retirement of Professor William Lambert Richardson. Succeeding Dr. John Phillips Reynolds in 1886, Professor Richardson held the chair of obstetrics for twenty-one years; and, including the years of his instructorship and assistant professorship, he has taught more than a generation of students. An appreciation of Dr. Richardson as an organizer and administrator, as a hospital physician and private practitioner, and as a man and citizen, appears in another place in this number of the Bulletin. A just and vivid appreciation of him as a brilliant and forcible teacher of obstetrics rests in the memory of the Harvard Medical Alumni of a third of a century.

On the retirement of Professor Richardson, Dr. Charles Montraville Green was appointed to the chair. Dr. Green had taught gynæcology, as well as obstetrics, for many years, and for three years had been Associate Professor of Obstetrics and Clinical Gynæcology; but, although it was desired that he should continue to teach both closely allied subjects, it was thought best not to change the traditional title of the professorship, which dates from 1815, and is the fourth oldest chair in the Medical Department of the University. Dr. Green was therefore appointed Professor of Obstetrics, and the reorganized department is as follows:—

Charles M. Green, M.D., Professor of Obstetrics.

Franklin S. Newell, M.D., Assistant Professor of Obstetrics and Gynæcology.

Ernest B. Young, M.D., Instructor in Gynæcology.

Howard T. Swain, M.D., Instructor in Obstetrics.

Malcolm Storer, M.D., Assistant in Gynæcology.

William P. Graves, M.D., Assistant in Gynæcology.

Leo V. Friedman, M.D., Assistant in Obstetrics and Gynæcology.

James R. Torbert, M.D., Assistant in Obstetrics.

Nathaniel R. Mason, M.D., Assistant in Obstetrics and Gynæcology.

Robert L. DeNormandie, M.D., Assistant in Obstetrics.

As in other departments of the School, the instruction in this department has shown progressive enlargement as the years have passed. In the third year the didactic teaching in obstetrics remains essentially unchanged: two lectures, a recitation, and a clinical conference are given each week. In the clinical work, however, from the requirement of 1883, that each student must take charge of two cases, has developed the requirement that to obtain the degree he must have conducted the labor and convalescence of six cases, on one of which he must have received clinical instruction. More recently, however, each third-year student is assigned to an externe service at the Boston Lying-in Hospital for a period of two weeks, during which time he not only has charge of eight or ten cases, but has a considerable experience in witnessing and assisting at other cases. In gynæcology two didactic exercises are given each week during the second term of the third year, and each student is assigned for six two-hour clinics at either the Boston City Hospital; the Free Hospital for Women, or the Boston Dispensary.

It is well recognized by the Faculty that owing to the crowded curriculum of the third year, the instruction, particularly in the special clinical branches, can be hardly more than elementary.

While the necessary field of didactic instruction is amply provided for, the time for clinical teaching in the specialties is necessarily restricted. In the fourth year, however, which is wholly elective, there is ample opportunity for the student to devote himself to those courses which he conceives will best fit him for his chosen field in medicine, whether as general practitioner or as specialist in some narrower field of practice and research. It may be of interest to record that, since the new fourth-year elective courses were established, more than 80 per cent. of the elective courses offered have been taken in the fundamental subjects of anatomy, medicine, surgery, obstetrics, and pediatrics, and that of the subjects in specialized work gynæcology has generally had the largest number of students.

The present elective course in obstetrics requires the whole time of the student for a month. For two weeks he serves as resident externe of the Boston Lying-in Hospital, and devotes himself chiefly to the care of out-patients. He attends in labor from ten to fifteen cases, cares for the convalescence, and writes reports of his work. Every week-day during the month, when not in attendance on a case of labor, he makes the morning ward visit with the physician on duty, has an opportunity to observe maternal convalescence and the care of young infants, witnesses operations, and is trained in the obstetric examination of applicants for admission. The examination involves a careful study of previous obstetric history, of pelvimetry, of foetometry, and of the hygiene, pathology, and treatment of pregnancy. During the month the student is given a course in operative obstetrics on the manikin and foetal cadaver, in which all the usual operations are demonstrated by the teacher and repeated by the student. Each student is also required to present a thesis on an approved subject of his choice, intended to necessitate study and investigation of some special subject, with an inclusive bibliography.

As showing the present opportunity for clinical experience in obstetrics, it may be stated that in the graduating class of 1908 an average number of over twenty cases was delivered and attended in convalescence by each student,—this in addition to other cases witnessed or conducted in part.

The elective course in gynæcology is given in the Gynæcological Department of the Boston City Hospital, and requires the entire time of the student during the forenoons of two months. Each student serves for two weeks in the out-patient clinic, in which he is trained in history taking, in the bi-manual examination, and in the diagnosis and treatment of ambulatory cases. For ten days or more he serves in the wards as an assistant dresser, and thus has an excellent opportunity to observe convalescence, to learn the details of post-operative care, and to give ether. During the remaining time he is present at a daily ward clinic, hears clinical lectures, has practice in physical examination, witnesses operations, as well as the minor methods of treatment, general and local. He writes a thesis on an approved subject of his choice, and he is required to devote a part of his time to the examination of pathological material. The Department of Pathology, co-operating with the Gynæcological Department, gives assistance and instruction, and thus the student is trained, as far as time allows, in both clinical and pathological work.

In addition to the work of the academic year the department offers courses in the Summer School of Medicine. In obstetrics Dr. Swain and his assistants give the course formerly given by Dr. Green, from 1880 to 1905; and approved students have an excellent opportunity for training in clinical work. Clinical courses in the wards are also given by the Out-patient Physicians on ward duty. In gynæcology clinical courses are offered at the Boston City Hospital by Drs. Young, Friedman, and Mason, and in the Out-patient Department of the Free Hospital for Women by Dr. Graves.

A progressively growing work of the School, in this as well as in other departments, is the instruction of graduates in medicine. In both obstetrics and gynæcology, courses for graduates are offered throughout the academic year, and in the year just closed this department stood second in the number of its graduate students.

THE DEPARTMENT OF NEUROLOGY AND PSYCHIATRY.

It is certain that, as time goes on, the study of the nervous system and its diseases will attract larger and larger numbers of the best minds in the profession. If other branches of medicine have more to do with means of preserving life when acutely threatened, this branch deals pre-eminently with the means of securing the best fruits of living. The anatomy and physiology of the nervous system are complex, but their study is fascinating and repaying. Its diseases are dramatic in their origin and symptoms, and in investigating them the physician finds himself confronted by the deepest individual and social interests of human life. If neurology and psychiatry are less dependent than some of the other specialties on certain of the natural sciences, they are more dependent upon the ever-widening sciences of philosophy, psychology, sociology, and ethics, and their teaching in the Harvard Medical School is coming more and more to reflect this broader view of their importance.

Neurology and psychiatry were first taught, at Harvard, as subdivisions of general medicine, and the first Lecturer in Neurology, Dr. James Putnam, was appointed in 1874. At that time the only neurological clinic available for instruction was the newly established out-patient service at the Massachusetts General Hospital, created in pursuance of the wise counsel of the Superintendent, Dr. Norton Folsom. The quarters of the new department were one small triangular room, hardly larger than a closet, in the old out-patient building. A year later Dr. S. G. Webber, then physician to the City Hospital, an intelligent, thorough, and conscientious student and teacher, was appointed "Clinical Instructor" with Dr. Putnam, and served faithfully for ten years. In 1885 his place was taken by Dr. George L. Walton, who brought originality, ability, and genial gifts which endeared him to the students until he resigned one year ago. In 1888 Dr. P. C. Knapp was made Clinical Instructor, and through this appointment the School gained the services of a thoroughly trained, accurate, and devoted teacher, as well as the use of the valuable material of the out-patient department of the City Hospital. Dr. Morton Prince served acceptably also in like capacity for three years, resigning in 1898 to take the professorship at Tufts Medical School.

The teaching of the earlier years consisted for the most part in clinical lectures, conferences, and demonstrations, but after the appointment of Drs. Walton and Knapp the fourth-year students had the option of a more thorough drill in the examination and treatment of out-patients. There was at first but one lecture to third-year students per week, and the plan adopted was, in general, to present patients illustrating first the peripheral nerve diseases, then those of the spinal cord, and finally of the brain. Owing to the large size of the classes, no large amount of personal instruction was possible, but from the first great use was made of the Socratic question and answer method, together with recitations on subjects covered by a series of printed questions. In looking back, it is easy to see that the demonstrations might profitably have been more systematic, the lectures more simple, and dogmatic, and that a study of symptoms such as is now admirably given by Dr. Taylor could have been substituted to advantage for a portion of the demonstrations of diseases. But critics should remember that at that day, when even among physicians neurology had no standing or was regarded as a frill, and when students came utterly unprepared to a course which would have seemed hard even at the best, it was of some value to create a living interest in the subject, and for this purpose to follow the methods which had proved so successful in the hands of men like Hebra. Even a lecture over the heads of students may, and in fact often did, accomplish this result.

The appointment of Dr. E. W. Taylor to the position of Neuropathologist, which the liberal sympathies and foresight of Dr. Councilman brought about, and the courses offered by him, together with the spreading interest in the subject amongst the profession at large, induced a more adequate degree of preparation among the second-year students which made possible a wholly new grade of teaching for both third and fourth year men. Since 1904 Dr. Taylor has devoted himself entirely to clinical teaching, while neuropathology has been made an independent department and placed under the able leadership of Dr. E. E. Southard. In 1901 the teaching force of the Clinical Department was strengthened by the appointment of Dr. G. H. Waterman as Assistant, the value of whose services is steadily more and more appreciated.

The present status and general outlook of the teaching of neurology at our School is then as follows: Steps are taken even in the first year to show the relationship between the anatomy, physiology, and pathology of the nervous system, through active co-operation of the departments concerned. In the second year begins the neuropathological work with Dr. Southard and his assistants, and this is for the present made more pointed and practical by a certain amount of clinical demonstration at the Danvers Hospital for the Insane. At the same time the students have the option of attending a series of lectures by Dr. Putnam upon applied psychology, and another by Dr. Taylor on symptomatology as related to local lesions of the nervous system.

The students reach the third year much more thoroughly prepared than formerly, not alone through the instruction specified, but also through their contact with the younger teachers of the general medical departments, and are now better able to appreciate and utilize the more advanced teaching which they are to receive. In the first half of this year one lecture weekly is given by Dr. Taylor, who presents a systematic, painstaking, and well-illustrated study of symptoms as related to localized lesions of the nervous system. During the second half-year Professor James J. Putnam gives two lectures weekly, which comprise a systematic course on the psycho-neuroses and their treatment, accompanied by demonstrations, by Dr. Taylor, of patients illustrating the diseases touched upon. The last month is given up to a critical study, under Dr. Waterman, of printed cases from Putnam and Waterman's "Studies in Neurological Diagnosis."

Students who elect Neurology in their fourth year are given a thorough training in diagnosis and case-taking in four-hour sessions, four days a week, at the Massachusetts General and City Hospitals, in sections which attend for two months each. Two days a week are devoted to similar work at the McLean and Boston Hospitals for the Insane. For several years the students have been invited by Dr. Edward Cowles, Instructor in Psychiatry, to evening conferences, at which the work of the forenoon at the above-mentioned hospitals for the insane is carefully discussed.

The teaching of psychiatry* has been always hampered by the lack of convenient clinical advantages,—a lack which the energy of the several instructors, Dr. C. F. Folsom in the early days, and for many years past Dr. Edward Cowles, has made good, as well as circumstances and the courtesy of the superintendents of the hospitals near Boston have allowed. The system now in use has been carefully developed and conscientiously superintended by Dr. Cowles, seconded by Drs. Tuttle and Noyes, who have generously devoted much time and thought to the work. The third-year students receive a weekly lecture on psychiatry through one term, and, so far as possible, a weekly clinic by which the principles of diagnosis and pathogenesis are systematically described and illustrated. There is good reason to believe that in the near future the State will build one or more wards within easy reach of the students of our School, through which the long inadequate facilities for clinical instruction will be greatly improved.

In all teaching it should be the aim of the instructor to develop in the fullest possible degree the conscious volition and constructive power of the pupil, as by encouraging or requiring critical judgment, analysis, and research. The members of the Department of Neurology and Psychiatry are alive to this need, and will make one of their main objects the elaboration of a practical means of meeting it. Much attention is now being devoted in the out-patient work at the Massachusetts General Hospital to an intensified analysis of the influences, personal and social, which tend to excite abnormal or unfavorable mental states. The habit of carrying on investigations of this sort is of great practical value in the work of the general practitioner, and the students will be encouraged to develop themselves in this direction.

* Dr. John E. Tyler, Superintendent of the McLean Hospital, was Lecturer in Mental Diseases from 1864 to 1871, and Professor 1871-1878. Dr. C. F. Folsom was Assistant Professor 1882-1885, and Dr. Theodore W. Fisher was Clinical Instructor, 1884-1888, and Lecturer 1888-1898.

With the growing interest in psychology and philosophy, in psychiatry and neurology, which unquestionably characterizes the present day, the outlook for the adequate teaching of the latter branches is a bright one.

THE WARREN ANATOMICAL MUSEUM.

The Museum, so important as an aid in the teaching of the medical sciences, has also had its sphere of usefulness increased commensurate to the noble quarters in which it has been located. The Curator is Dr. William F. Whitney, and a generous endowment has been supplied by a benefactor of the School to insure its care and growth. The collection has about nine thousand specimens illustrating normal and pathological anatomy and materia medica, which are constantly being increased by new preparations. The hall containing these, occupying the upper three floors of the Administration Building, has been universally praised for its fine proportions, coloring, and beautiful light. The aim has been to have it simple, quiet, and dignified, and in keeping with the objects which it contains. These in themselves are not artistic, but when it is remembered what they represent of human suffering, which it is hoped their study may tend to alleviate, no setting can be too good for them.

While the primary use is for the student, large guide labels enable the casual visitor to readily find his way about and understand the general arrangement. The first floor is devoted in general to diseases of the skeleton and its overlying soft tissues, the parts of the body which are the especial domain of surgery. In the first gallery the cases contain malformations and diseases of the arterial and nervous system and viscera. In the second gallery are the diseases of special sense.

Normal anatomy also finds its home on the upper floor, and occupies the larger part of the space. Its cases are already full, and new ones have been added this spring to supply the demand for room called for by the contributions made by Professor Dwight. He has taken great personal interest in arranging the collection, and has devoted much time to its installation.

It is hard to realize what pressure the specimens, which number over ten thousand, were under in the old school building, for with three times the shelf room here there is not to-day a single empty case, and in many of them there is distinct crowding.

As the Museum is open all day, it is visited by people of all classes as well as our own students, and, although not generally advertised, it is surprising to find how many from outside visit it.

The specimens are not only used for lectures in the school and students' study, but also are loaned for lectures outside. It is the policy of the Museum to extend its resources as far as possible consistent with the safety of the specimens, and a request is never refused when they can be of real use. A specimen is of no value, as an object in a jar, unless it teaches something, and, although one may be lost or destroyed by careless handling, it is much better that this should happen than that it should never be used.

Another use of the collection is to supply illustrations for books and articles on medical subjects, and photographs are being continually made for this purpose by different men.

The hospitals are naturally the greatest contributors to the collection, but contributions from outside are earnestly requested, and it is hoped that the Alumni will bear this in mind, and be sure that anything that is rare and unusual will always find a hearty welcome. But it is not only these that are wanted, but often some of the commonest are lacking from the fact that no one has taken the trouble to get them. One such is the bones of the leg from a Pott's fracture, of which there is not a single specimen, and another is a Colles' fracture of the wrist, of which there is but one good specimen. Perhaps some one will make good these deficiencies.

While the collection is fairly rich in malformations, there are many gaps to be filled, especially in the rarer forms, such as the cardiac monsters and double malformations which are united by the head alone.

Since it is impossible to keep a printed catalogue up to date, it is proposed to issue bulletins from time to time of various parts of the collection. The first of these will be on the diseases of bones and joints, which are of especial interest to the orthopedic surgeon. To help defray the expenses of the publication, contributions have been received from the family of the late Dr. Buckminster Brown, and it is expected that it will be issued early next year. Drs. E. H. Bradford and Augustus Thorndike have taken great interest in this, and have given much time to its accomplishment.

During the last two months one end of the upper gallery has been utilized for an exhibition of engravings of noted medical men of all times. The nucleus of this was about seventy valuable engravings presented to the Medical Faculty by the Royal College of Surgeons of England, through the good offices of Dr. Walter G. Chase. These were augmented by loans from the collections of Drs. Chase and Young, the former of whom arranged the exhibition. It was extremely interesting, and attracted many visitors.

The beauty of the room has been further enhanced by replacing the plaster busts of Drs. Warren, Bigelow, Jackson, Bowditch, Holmes, and Waterhouse with marble ones. This was accomplished partly by donations from the descendants of these men and partly from a fund in the hands of Professor J. Collins Warren, which could be used for this purpose. A plan is under consideration to have an original bust of Professor J. B. S. Jackson, made by Mr. Bela Pratt, to occupy one of the vacant pedestals. It has also been proposed to have one of Professor Aaron Dexter, one of the original Faculty, but as yet no likeness of him has been found from which it could be made. Should any one know of the existence of any picture, Dr. Warren would be very glad to hear of it.

THREE NOTABLE TEACHERS.

Happily, it is not often in the history of an institution that such a loss is sustained among its leaders as the past year has brought to the Harvard Medical School. Fitz, Richardson, and Warren are honored names to more than a generation of Harvard men,—names which represent a high ideal in medical scholarship and admirable principles of citizenship and service in the world at large. They who bear them are yet spared in the vigor of ripe maturity to guide and aid the School in countless ways, but, at the close of their active lives as teachers, it is fitting that their professional careers should be briefly reviewed for the benefit of those who, trained in part by their words and example, are striving to follow in their footsteps.

REGINALD HEBER FITZ.

HERSEY PROFESSOR OF THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF PHYSIC.

[From the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal, May 7, 1908.]

Reginald Heber Fitz, whose house officers and assistants have united to celebrate his sixty-fifth birthday, has for thirty-eight years been an active factor in the development of medicine and medical education, not only in Boston, but also in the United States. Having graduated from Harvard in 1864, Dr. Fitz started his medical studies in Cambridge under the inspiring direction of the eminent physician and anatomist, Jeffries Wyman. At the same time he attended the lectures at the Harvard Medical School. The following year he came to Boston, and devoted himself to study at the Medical School until April, 1867, when he became house officer at the Boston

City Hospital. Here, during the service of Dr. John G. Blake, he had an opportunity to study a severe epidemic of typhus fever. After the hospital service, a few months sufficed to give him his degree, and at the end of his four years of medical training, soon after Commencement in 1868, he sailed for Europe.

Virchow had published his "Cellular Pathology" ten years before, and during the time that had elapsed the men who were to make modern medicine had developed under the inspiration of this truly epoch-making man, and were in a position to give their best teaching. In Vienna under Oppolzer and Skoda, in Berlin under Virchow, in Paris under Cornil, and in London under Murchison, Dr. Fitz studied and worked. Before his return to Boston, in 1870, he published a paper in Virchow's Archives on "Bronchiectasis."

Coming back to Boston from his period of close application in the European laboratories, his ability and attainments were at once recognized, especially by the older and powerful group of men at the Massachusetts General Hospital and the Harvard Medical School, so that in 1871 he was made Microscopist to the former and at the latter Instructor in Pathological Anatomy. His methodical German methods at autopsies were a revelation to the house officers of that day, and he early demonstrated his skill as a microscopist by making, in a tumor of doubtful origin, a correct diagnosis of syphilis, to the discomfiture of his competitors in microscopic work.

Two years later, in 1873, he entered the Faculty of the Harvard Medical School as Assistant Professor of Pathology, so that for thirty-five years he has had to do constructively with medical education.

Dr. Fitz's return to Boston, it will be remembered, was coincident with Charles W. Eliot's advent to the presidency of Harvard College. President Eliot had immediately joined the radicals of the Medical Faculty, and aided them in putting through the changes which did away with the old lecture system and established the first graded course of medical instruction in the country. Although Dr. Fitz took no part in bringing about this change in the course of study, nevertheless, as Secretary of the Faculty from 1874 to 1883, he did much towards setting forth the advantages of the graded continuous course of study, so that one by one the other schools of the country fell into line. He early became a member of the committee of the Faculty on the Course of Study, and for many years has acted as chairman of this committee. In this position he has exerted an influence on medical education by many carefully considered reports which he has presented to the Faculty.

As we have seen, Dr. Fitz early took rank as a pathologist, but at the same time he held the position as physician at the Boston Dispensary from 1871 to 1882, and he has, throughout his career, looked upon pathology and allied medical sciences as the handmaidens of clinical medicine rather than goddesses to be pursued for their own charms.

Dr. Fitz was appointed Professor of Pathological Anatomy in 1878, the title being changed to Shattuck Professor of Pathological Anatomy the following year. His lectures were descriptions of the changes found in regions and organs rather than of the processes bringing about the changes. The causal factors in disease were but dimly understood until the later days of his professorship, but his clear-cut, concise description of pathological changes will ever remain with his pupils.

In 1886 he presented, at the meeting of the Association of American Physicians, his most celebrated contribution to medical literature entitled "Perforating Inflammation of the Vermiform Appendix, with Special Reference to its Early Diagnosis and Treatment."

In the following year, 1887, he was appointed one of the Visiting Physicians of the Massachusetts General Hospital, though he maintained his position of Professor of Pathological Anatomy at the Medical School till 1892, when he became Hersey Professor of the Theory and Practice of Physic. In this position he made no attempt to modify the old lecture system of this professorship beyond the establishment of his famous quiz-clinic, where the students' reasoning faculties were sharpened under the watchful eye of the professor himself. In his lectures selected groups of diseases were treated so that the student might have a comprehensive grasp of the underlying pathological conditions on which the whole group was dependent.

In 1900, urged on by the great development in the knowledge of disease processes and of laboratory methods for the recognition of morbid conditions, Dr. Fitz found it necessary to introduce into his department a body of assistants who should aid in the work. This group of men have taught in small sections, giving in the second year the most elementary instruction, which is supplemented in the third year by more advanced work. This system of teaching he expanded until now in the fourth year there are courses in the hospital wards and laboratories where patients are under continuous observation by the students. Opportunity is also offered at the Medical School for original investigation on medical problems, making in all a very comprehensive course of study for the student in the Theory and Practice of Medicine.

In 1889 Dr. Fitz delivered before the New York Pathological Society his second notable contribution to medical literature, the Middleton Goldsmith Lecture on "Acute Pancreatitis."

Honors in the medical world have come to Dr. Fitz, and we find that he has had not only membership in the local medical societies, but a guiding hand as well, having served the Massachusetts Medical Society as Councillor for many years, and the Boston Society for Medical Improvement as President. In 1889 he was elected a Fellow of the American Society of Arts and Sciences; in 1892, Associate Fellow of the College of Physicians of Philadelphia; in 1893, Honorary Member of the Medical and Chirurgical Faculty of the State of Maryland; in 1900 Corresponding Member of the Schlesische Gesellschaft für Vaterländische Cultur; in 1904, Honorary Fellow of the New York Academy of Medicine; in 1907, Corresponding Member of Gesellschaft für innere Medizin und Kinderheilkunde of Vienna; in 1905, Harvard College conferred the degree of LL.D.; he was President of the Association of American Physicians in 1894; and in 1907 he was President of the Congress of American Physicians and Surgeons, delivering an address entitled the "Borderland of Medicine and Surgery."

The work that Dr. Fitz has done during his active period of life has been largely critical and judicial, though always with a constructive tendency. He has formed his opinions for himself, and then bravely stood by them, even at times when they were in opposition to those of a majority of his friends or to the potent influence of the President of the University. His general position has been that of a conservative and critical councillor rather than a radical leader. His industrious habits of work have been individualistic, on the whole. He has studied the works of others, rearranged their ideas or presented them in a new and truer light to the world, but has not sought to be the leader of a group of students searching for new facts. Yet his personal industrious application to study has been a source of inspiration to those who have had the good fortune to be his students and assistants.

The freedom from the petty annoyances of teaching and hospital detail that is to come to him is to be considered an earnest of wise and thoughtful articles in the near future on some of the great problems that concern medical advancement.

A. K. STONE.

WILLIAM L. RICHARDSON, A.B., M.D.

PROFESSOR OF OBSTETRICS 1886-1907, DEAN OF THE FACULTY
OF MEDICINE 1893-1907.

William Lambert Richardson graduated from Harvard College in the class of 1864, of which class he has ever since been the efficient secretary. In the autumn of that year he entered the Harvard Medical School, received an appointment as house pupil at the Massachusetts General Hospital in May, 1866, and, after serving the usual term, graduated from the Medical School in June, 1867. He immediately joined the Massachusetts Medical Society, and in July went to Europe to continue his medical studies and to travel. In the autumn of 1867 he again began work in Dublin in the School of Physic, and was an externe at the Rotunda, the Dublin Lying-in Hospital, where he took the degree of Licentiate of Midwifery and a special diploma for excellence in obstetrics, under the then master, Dr. John Denham. He spent the summer months in various parts of Germany and the winter in Vienna. He travelled a good deal in Europe, and returning home, began to practise in Boston in 1870. In the same year he was made a district physician of the Boston Dispensary, and two years later a physician at the central office, retiring in 1874. In 1871 he was appointed physician to out-patients at the Massachusetts General Hospital, and a visiting physician in 1883, which position he resigned in 1903, and became one of the consulting physicians. In 1872 he was appointed a physician of the Boston Children's Hospital, retiring in 1874, and in the same year (1872) became visiting physician of the Boston Lying-in Hospital. From 1873-83 he was a medical inspector of the Boston Board of Health.

During the summer of 1875 he was acting secretary of the Massachusetts State Board of Health during the absence of Dr. C. F. Folsom in Europe. The following year he prepared for the State Board of Health a summary of seven years' work of that Board, and this was published in a volume of its reports. In February, 1885, he was appointed by the Mayor of Boston a member of an advisory committee to consult with the Board of Health in regard to a threatened invasion of cholera, and was chosen secretary of the committee. Since 1874 he has been a Councillor of the Massachusetts Medical Society, and has been chairman of several important committees. In 1887 he was the anniversary chairman of the society.

In 1888 he was appointed by the Governor of the State a trustee of the Perkins Institution and Massachusetts School for the Blind. In 1870 he was elected a director of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, in 1871 its treasurer, and in 1892 a trustee. He has been a physician of St. Joseph's Home and of the Boston Children's Mission; a director of the Farm School for Boys on Thompson's Island in Boston Harbor; a director of the Adams Nervine Asylum; a director of the Boston Training School for Nurses; a member of the Executive Committee of the Boston Medical Library; treasurer of the Massachusetts Medical Benevolent Society and of the Lodge of St. Andrews, one of the oldest Free Masons' organizations in the country; a member of the Board of Managers of the Mount Auburn Cemetery. He is a member of the most important local medical societies, of the American Gynæcological Society and of the Obstetrical Society of London.

Not content with these multiform professional and civic activities and responsibilities, and although especially occupied with obstetrics and a large general practice, he found time and energy for military interests. In 1864, before graduating from Harvard College, he joined the 1st Corps of Cadets of the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia, became a corporal the following year, hospital steward in 1871, and was commissioned surgeon of the Corps in 1875, which office he held until 1899, when he resigned, and was retired with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. As trustee and treasurer of its veteran association, which owns the camp ground at Hingham and the Armory at Boston, he continues his interest in this organization.

For many years Dr. Richardson has been a member of the Board of Management of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal. His contributions to this and other medical journals and volumes of society transactions have been numerous and important, covering more than a score of titles, and ranging from obstetrical and gynæcological problems to and through such varied subjects as Tenement Houses, a Rare Form of Monstrosity, Cases of Congenital Dislocation of the Knee Joint, Sewerage of Large Cities, Infant Mortality, Rules for the Management of Infants and Children, the Duties and Conduct of Nurses in Private Nursing.

During the university year from September, 1872, to July, 1873, he held the position of instructor pro tempore in obstetrics in the Harvard Medical School, and in 1874 he was appointed instructor; in 1875 he was appointed Instructor in Clinical Midwifery; in 1877 this title was changed back to that of Instructor in Obstetrics; in 1882 he was appointed Assistant Professor in Obstetrics; in 1886 he was made Professor of Obstetrics, which position he resigned in 1907, becoming Professor of Obstetrics, Emeritus.

In 1893 he was elected Dean of the Medical Faculty of Harvard University, succeeding Dr. H. P. Bowditch, and subsequently, in 1899, when the Medical, Dental, and Veterinary Schools were placed under one Faculty of Medicine, he was elected Dean of the combined Faculty.

Often such a mere enumeration of titles and positions held by an individual is apt to be somewhat unprofitable. But this is not the case with regard to Dr. Richardson. It is in large measure the key to the character of the man and to his place in the community where he has lived. One is immediately struck by the remarkable number of titles, and also by the great variety of the positions and interests involved. Therein is shown the all-round, good citizenship of the man, and the broad sympathies of the physician who is not limited by specialization. Again, what Dr. Richardson has undertaken he has done. He has not merely represented, but has worked himself while inspiring others to work. The undertakings and the results indicate clearness of conception, a methodical habit, industry, an unusual executive and administrative capacity.

These characteristics are perhaps best illustrated by his re-establishment and reorganization of the Boston Lying-in Hospital, which he found in 1872 in a state of suspended animation and left in 1906, not only on a sound basis and in a flourishing condition as a hospital, but the centre of obstetrical relief and of obstetrical teaching in New England. The training of obstetricians and of obstetrical nurses, as well as the care of patients, has been its contribution to the good of the community. The elaborate organization of an obstetrical service in the homes of the poorer classes, aiding the systematic development of the practical teaching of obstetrics, has been an outgrowth of this hospital. Through Dr. Richardson's initiative the antiseptic treatment of confinement cases was early adopted there, with the result that the mortality from septicæmia among 12,252 patients cared for from 1884 to 1907 was only one-fifth of one per cent.

Whether viewed as an organizer, as an executive, as a teacher, as a clinician, as a general practitioner, as a trustee for others, as a citizen, the younger alumni may profitably study the career of the subject of this brief sketch, and find therein illustrated many of the most important relations of the physician to his profession and to public duties and responsibilities.

GEORGE B. SHATTUCK.

JOHN COLLINS WARREN.

MOSELEY PROFESSOR OF SURGERY.

John Collins Warren resigned from the Harvard Medical School last autumn, having retired from the staff of the Massachusetts General Hospital in 1905. Harvard Medical Alumni may congratulate themselves that he has not yet laid down his numerous other activities for the advancement of our profession, to which he has faithfully, intelligently, and successfully devoted the energies of his life.

Dr. Warren is still almost as a young man in our midst. His zeal, resourcefulness, and energies, tempered by experience and sound judgment, are sought by the promoters of important professional enterprises of the State and Nation. While putting aside the praise which must accrue to a surgeon and teacher of his distinguished record, he cannot escape, and may well cherish, the gratitude, affection, and loyalty of two generations of Harvard men.

With Dr. Warren's retirement from official position a remarkable surgical line temporarily ends. We cannot think that the surgical talents which have distinguished his family for the better part of two centuries shall long lie dormant. We recall with interest the fact that John Collins Warren is the fourth man of his family in direct succession to hold one of the most important surgical positions in New England, and the third to occupy the chair of Surgery in the Harvard School.

John Warren, his great-grandfather, presided over a large military hospital during the Revolution, and was a leader in founding the Harvard Medical School, in which he was the first Professor of Surgery and Anatomy.

John Collins Warren (the first), our Dr. Warren's grandfather, was the first Surgeon to the Massachusetts General Hospital, which, with James Jackson, he founded in 1810; and he was his father's, John Warren's, successor at Harvard in the Chair of Surgery.

Jonathan Mason Warren, the father of our Dr. Warren and the son of the first John Collins Warren, was appointed Surgeon to the Massachusetts General Hospital in 1846. He died in his prime.

The life of John Collins Warren, the subject of this sketch, still so vigorous, covers all that remarkable period known to us as the Age of Modern Surgery,—the Age of Morton and Ether; of Lister and Asepsis; of Pasteur and Bacteriology; of Virchow and the Cellular Pathology; of Claude Bernard; of von Langenbeck; of Billroth; of Gross and Bigelow in this country; and of those distinguished men who still dominate the surgery of to-day, among whom Warren stands a conspicuous figure.

Like his father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, Dr. Warren was educated under the best surgical traditions of New England. He is an example of that combination, unfortunately rare among us, of careful early training, university culture, European study, and ambition founded upon fine, ethical, and scholarly lines.

Dr. Warren was graduated A.B. from Harvard in 1863, at the age of twenty-one, and entered at once upon his professional studies. He went first to Philadelphia, and became a pupil of Gross and Pancoast at the Jefferson School. Among his numerous writings there is a charming account of the conditions in that best of American schools nearly fifty years ago.

That was the era of didactic outpourings by the teachers. Though Jacob Bigelow was living, and was urging upon educators the importance of personal investigations by students, the old teaching traditions still maintained, and students were regarded as but vehicles upon whom a few professors might turn the current of knowledge. Personal instruction under the direction of private practitioners was the rule also, and supplemented the brief lectures of the professors; but specialism was unknown, and the endeavor of the schools did not look beyond the general and rather smattering training of everyday practitioners. This was true of America, and was true in spite of Hunter and Cooper, Malgaigne, von Langenbeck, and the elder Bigelow.

After a year in Philadelphia, Dr. Warren returned to Boston, and attended the Harvard School, his terms there being interrupted for a short space by an experience of military surgery in Virginia. In the last year of the Civil War he entered the Massachusetts General Hospital as house pupil, and was graduated M.D. from Harvard in 1866.

For more than a century ambitious American students had been going to Europe to complete their medical studies. Dr. Warren followed the example of his father and grandfather, and sailed for Europe after leaving the Harvard School. He studied German in Dresden. He attended surgical lectures in Vienna. Billroth was then lecturing at the Austrian capital; while Rokitansky, Oppolzer, and Skoda were still conducting their famous courses. There were other stimulating influences for the young student, and men now famous in medical history were active,—Hebra, Hyrtl, Cohnheim, and von Langenbeck. Dr. Warren remained two years in Germany, and then journeyed to Paris, where he spent another satisfactory year. He tells with greatest interest, however, of his sojourn in England and Scotland, and of the dawn of the aseptic era, which was received with scoffs by the great men of that day. Spencer Wells was performing abdominal sections, and the high mortality rate of his early ovariectomies was shocking conservative surgeons. Lister, however, was at his work in Glasgow, and the fire, which he had kindled, already was blinding ancient eyes and offending accepted traditions.

Dr. Warren, the accomplished young American, was kindly received by Lister, and imbibed from him a just understanding of the principles and practice of the new antiseptic treatment.

Perhaps certain elements in Dr. Warren's education, as I have sketched it, may have outlined and foreshadowed the distinguishing characteristics of his subsequent career.

From his American teachers he must have acquired resourcefulness, courage, and power; from the Germans, patience, thoroughness, and depth; from the French, breadth and versatility; from Lister, a new faith, and confidence in the great future which was dawning upon surgery.

In 1869, thirty-nine years ago, Dr. Warren returned to Boston, where his energies and his interest have ever since been centred. He was necessarily a marked man from the first, and shortly after settling to practice was appointed Physician to Out-patients at the Massachusetts General Hospital. The next year he was transferred to the Surgical Department of the Hospital, and had as his colleagues the two surgeons now so well-known to us,—Charles B. Porter and Henry H. A. Beach. Through these three young men the antiseptic principle of surgery was introduced into the Hospital, and Dr. Warren's first-hand knowledge of the method became an important factor in its gradual evolution there.

Promotions seem to have been rapid at that time, for, five years after his first junior appointment and at the age of thirty-four, Dr. Warren was promoted to Visiting Surgeon. Meantime, in 1871, he had been appointed Instructor in Surgery at the Harvard Medical School. The school work was then carried on in the old Grove Street building and in the hospital wards. Henry J. Bigelow was at the height of his career, and his influence dominated New England surgeons. He little suspected the stupendous revolution in surgical methods which was to be introduced through the efforts of the young out-patient surgeons whom I have named.

We have no space here to discuss the gradual and inevitable changes in practice which were developed during the two succeeding decades,—changes which Bigelow is said to have viewed with uneasiness and suspicion up to the time of his resignation from the Hospital in 1886.

In 1882 Dr. Warren was promoted to Assistant Professor of Surgery, Dr. David W. Cheever being named as the full Professor; in 1887 Dr. Warren became Associate Professor; and, in 1893, Professor of Surgery, succeeding Dr. Cheever. This chair received the Moseley endowment in 1899, and is now known as the Moseley Professorship. Dr. Warren resigned the post in 1907, as we know.

Other honors came to him in the course of years. In 1895 he received the LL.D. from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. In 1882, shortly after the founding by Gross of the American Surgical Association, Dr. Warren was elected to its fellowship, and in 1897 had the honor of serving as its President. In 1900, at the centenary of the founding of the Royal College of Surgeons of England, he was elected an honorary fellow of that famous body, and in 1906 he received the further distinguished title of LL.D. from Harvard University.

For nearly forty years Dr. Warren has grown in the esteem of Harvard men and of the American medical profession. Among our European brethren, also, his career is regarded as one of the best examples of American surgical achievement. His eminent place has been won by faithful, unremitting work, devotion to the duties in hand, a sound judgment, and an unbaffled optimism. He was one of the earliest among us to combine studies in surgical research with clinical practice.

Among his early writings is a monograph entitled "Healing of Arteries in Man and Animals," 1886, while his best-known publication is a large octavo, entitled "Surgical Pathology and Therapeutics," 1895. He is the joint editor and author also of the "International Text-book of Surgery."

Among Harvard medical graduates he is known and valued as the untiring teacher, the voluminous and convincing writer and speaker, the able and sound clinician.

Such enterprises and endeavors marked all his middle life, but he will always be remembered for the great work of his later years, the promoting and establishing of the splendid new home of the Harvard Medical School.

In 1901 Dr. Warren, in association with Dr. Henry P. Bowditch, was successful in impressing upon great capitalists the significance and promise of modern scientific medicine. By their efforts a large sum of money was raised, and the new "Medical Undertaking," hitherto regarded almost as a dream, became an assured fact. At the Harvard Commencement in 1901, President Eliot, through the energy of Dr. Warren, was enabled to make the following announcement, embodied in a telegram, now historic,—

DR. J. C. WARREN, Boston:

Referring our conversation to plans submitted,* I am prepared erect centre pavilion and two buildings new Medical School Harvard University. Said buildings to be known as and designated, Memorial Halls, In Memoriam Junius Spencer Morgan, native of Massachusetts, formerly a merchant of Boston; at the time of his death a merchant of London, England. You can announce this.

JOHN PIERPONT MORGAN.

This brief sketch can do little justice to Dr. Warren, the efficient public servant; for, in a true sense, he has been a public servant. The living man requires no eulogy, and Harvard Medical Alumni need no reminder of their long-time counsellor, teacher, and friend.

JAMES G. MUMFORD.

(LONDON, June 21, 1901.)

* The estimated cost of the buildings referred to in Mr. Morgan's message was $1,135,000. Mr. John D. Rockefeller added to the endowment of the School $1,000,000. Mrs. Collis P. Huntington, $250,000; seventy other friends of the movement, $571,725; while from other sources something over a million dollars was raised, a large portion of which was through the exertions of Dr. Warren.

REUNION OF HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI AT CHICAGO.

A meeting of Harvard Alumni which bids fair to become an annual event was held at Chicago during the recent meeting of the American Medical Association. The custom has grown up for alumni of certain schools to hold reunions during the sessions of the American Medical Association, but this year an evening was officially set aside for such reunions, and the Chicago committee encouraged the various medical schools to hold meetings. The Council of the Harvard Medical Alumni Association requested Dr. Henry F. Lewis, '88, of Chicago, to act as the local representative of the Association in making arrangements, and the success of the reunion was largely due to his efforts.

Headquarters were established in the Auditorium Hotel, and a registry was kept of Harvard Alumni. In spite of the fact that section dinners and the orations in medicine and surgery prevented the attendance of many who would otherwise have been present, nearly sixty men sat down to dinner on Tuesday, June 2, at the Great Northern Hotel. Among the notable absentees were Herbert L. Burrell, '79, President of the American Medical Association, who was forced to attend to official duties, and William S. Thayer, '89, of Johns Hopkins, who delivered the oration in medicine.

The dinner was strictly informal, and was presided over by Dr. Lewis, who gave no formal toasts, but called on various men for impromptu remarks. Mr. Frederic A. Delano, an Overseer of Harvard, was present, and emphasized the close relationship between the Medical School and other departments of the University. Charles Louis Mix, '94, spoke on the medical schools of Chicago, in which there is a little leaven of Harvard men teaching, and of the Cook County Hospital, whose staff recently was put upon a civil service basis with competitive examinations. Every Harvard man who took any of these examinations (and there were relatively not a few) obtained a place.

Dr. George W. Gay, '68, President of the Massachusetts Medical Society, brought the greetings of that society, and spoke of the experience of the profession in Massachusetts in dealing with medical legislation, fostering that which is wise and opposing that which is pernicious. He made a plea for the participation by Harvard men in clean politics, to the end that legislators who are endeavoring to frame wise laws affecting the public health may have their support and assistance. In closing, Dr. Gay indulged in a few remarks in reminiscent vein, which we reproduce:—

“Forty years ago this month I climbed that long flight of stairs leading to the pathological museum in the old Medical School building in North Grove Street, to take the examination for a medical degree. In those days the examination for graduation took place at the close of two or more years of study, and occupied about seventy minutes! Seven subjects, ten minutes each, comprised the curriculum; to wit, anatomy and physiology, surgery, theory and practice, materia medica, obstetrics, pathology and chemistry.

“Knowing a little something about anatomy, I had no difficulty with Professor Holmes. Dr. Hodges examined in surgery, and his first question was, ‘Which takes the longer to get well, a chancre or a chancroid?’ My answer was probably wrong, as he asked my authority. My assurance, born of youth and a limited experience and knowledge, led me to refer to my acquaintance with the affections in question at the hospital on Rainsford Island in Boston Harbor, where I had served as interne for a year under the pupillage of Dr. G. L. Underwood. We fell to talking upon professional matters connected with that institution until it was time to pass to the next chair.

“Dr. C. E. Buckingham was Professor of Obstetrics, and his first and only question was, ‘Well, doctor, how’s business?’ Having served under him a good deal in the Boston City Hospital and also in his private practice, he was fully aware of my limitations, and we had a very pleasant chat on professional topics until the time was up.

"In those days most of the Harvard students greatly feared Dr. J. B. S. Jackson, Professor of Pathology, 'morbid John,' as he was called in student parlance, for the simple reason that most of us knew little about the subject. The Professor was most thorough and painstaking in his teaching, but it must have been largely due to his kindness of heart that so many passed his examination successfully. In fact, it was a pretty poor specimen of a student who was thrown down, 'plucked,' as we used to say, by either Dr. Jackson or the genial Dr. G. C. Shattuck, Professor of Theory and Practice.

"Chemistry was also a bugbear to the students of those days, and yet few failed to get by Professor Bacon, the most reticent, precise, and dignified member of the Faculty.

"The attainments requisite for a medical degree in those days would make a sorry showing in these times of scientific study, but the class of 1868 contained such men as H. P. Bowditch, R. H. Fitz, Drs. Beach, Boardman, E. H. Brigham, Forster, Hastings, Jelly, Quinby, Rowe, Ruddick, Swett, Waterman, and Frank Wells, showing that a man's success in our profession does not depend wholly upon his attainments in evidence at graduation."

Dr. John Lovett Morse, '91, made timely reference to the School, as follows:—

"I want to call attention to the opportunities for graduate and summer study at the Harvard Medical School. The opportunities there are, I think, greater than in any other medical school in the country. They are, unfortunately, not taken advantage of as they should be, physicians in general apparently not knowing about them. I wish especially to call attention to the opportunities for graduate study and for study in the summer in the Pediatric Department. It is possible for a man to devote all his time, morning and afternoon, to the study of Pediatrics throughout the summer, the courses being arranged so as to fully occupy his time.

"The thing about the course of study in the Medical School which causes me the most anxiety is the increasing amount of time devoted to laboratory work and laboratory branches, the time which can be given to clinical branches being correspondingly diminished. This tendency is, I think, due to the large number and great influence of the members of the Faculty representing the laboratory departments, these gentlemen overestimating, perhaps, the importance of the laboratory branches and not being familiar with the needs of the practising physician.

"To my mind, the first aim of the School should be to turn out men competent to practise medicine and surgery. The second aim should be to train others, or these same men later, to become laboratory workers, or to devote themselves to pure science."

Dr. Thomas Morgan Rotch, '74, spoke in protest against the idea that Harvard conservatism might prevent a broad catholicity in her choice of teachers. He spoke as follows:—

"It is strictly true, as you have just heard, that I have taught everybody here, with the two exceptions noted. When I look upon the faces of these earnest workers from our Alma Mater, I am proud to have contributed something to your medical education. I want to bring a message to you, gathered as you are from all parts of our country, from the Harvard Medical School. Harvard has long been thought ultra-conservative, and many have believed that she erred in being too conservative. I am here to tell you that her conservatism has been slowly moving, as Harvard usually does, toward a wise and well-considered radicalism. Under the new rule of retirement on the age limit, vacancies will constantly occur in the staffs of the various hospitals of Boston, and these vacancies may be filled by men filling the chairs in Harvard. By an agreement of the University and the governing boards of these hospitals it will no longer be necessary for Harvard to limit her clinical instructors to men who have hospital appointments, but she will be able to give hospital appointments to men whom she may choose throughout the world to fill her teaching positions. Of course, Boston is the Hub of the Universe, but all wisdom is not pent up within her gates.

It sometimes may happen that the Boston man is not the best man who may be secured. In former times, Harvard had to make the best of circumstances, and select her clinical instructors from the staff of the hospitals; namely, from men who commanded hospital beds. Now she can offer hospital beds to those whom she selects as her teachers.

“You men of the West and you men from the East outside of Boston have gone forth from your Alma Mater, and have carried her precepts and her ideals. These precepts and ideals you have developed and amplified in the institutions in which you work,—in the State Universities, in Johns Hopkins, in the University of Chicago, and in other medical schools. You have developed yourselves, you have learned much since you left her halls, you have found new ideas and new methods. She wants and needs again such men as you. Go on working and becoming pre-eminent in your several branches. Some of you will surely be selected to take the places in Harvard which advancing age will vacate, and in competition with the younger men now living in Boston. As time goes on, the Harvard Medical School, more and more in close touch with the University authorities, will be better and better able to choose her Faculty anywhere in the world where she can find the best, and will be more and more able to offer these members of the Faculty laboratory and clinical facilities in the great hospitals of Boston even before her own hospitals are completed.”

Space forbids the enumeration of other speakers who enlivened the dinner.

Throughout the evening was enlivened by music and singing. That part of the impromptu programme was very enjoyable. In spite of the informality, perhaps because of it, and in spite of the necessary lack of preparation in regard to the programme and the speakers, the Alumni Reunion of Harvard Medical School at the Fifty-ninth Annual Session of the American Medical Association passed off with evident enjoyment and even with a high degree of enthusiasm.

THE HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI FUND.

The end of the third year of the Harvard Medical Alumni Fund seems a fitting moment to review what has been accomplished by means of the fund and to consider what are the prospects of its being maintained. Our readers may remember that, when the fund was started in 1906, it was proposed by the Council of the Alumni that whatever amount should be realized should be turned over to the Faculty with the recommendation that it be used as far as should seem desirable towards increasing the salaries of some of the younger instructors and assistants to such a point as should enable them to give most of their time to teaching. The swing of the pendulum in medical teaching seems to be towards such individual instruction as is possible only with a corps of earnest young teachers who are ready almost to live with their students. Three years ago the finances of the School did not permit the development of the idea of individual instruction, but, thanks largely to the timely assistance of the Alumni, a start has now been made in the right direction, and experience has shown that the teaching of these "Alumni Instructors," as by a recent vote of the Faculty they will henceforth be known, is a factor of the utmost importance in the work of the School. The Council of the Alumni regard it as a gracious and tactful act on the part of the Faculty to recognize, by designating as Alumni Instructors the teachers whose salaries are largely paid by this fund, the fact that without the co-operation of the Alumni such teachers would exist only in fewer numbers. As time goes on, it may, of course, appear that the annual alumni subscription may be used to more advantage in other directions. For the present we think that further development of the system of individual instruction, and thereby the production of a corps of teachers competent to do more advanced work in the future is of paramount importance. We propose that the fund shall be kept up indefinitely, and look forward to the time when each graduate shall regard it as his duty, so long as he shall live, to make a small annual contribution to his Alma Mater, with the certainty that, while we cannot, of course, in any way dictate in what manner our contributions shall be used, any suggestions that come from those of the Alumni who have shown their interest in the welfare of the School in this most practical way will receive at least respectful consideration.

In 1906 the subscription amounted to $2,931, a number of men giving all they proposed to give at one time. In 1907 it was $1,993, and in 1908 $2,063. The treasurer still has hopes of collecting some $300 more that has been promised for this year, but is not yet forthcoming. For the last two years we have given the School $1,500 annually for immediate use, with a varying amount to be added to the Permanent Medical Alumni Fund, which now amounts to $4,165. This Permanent Fund is to accumulate for the present, and its ultimate use will hereafter be decided upon.

As the average subscription is only about $5, we trust that a feeling of not being able to subscribe as liberally as he might like will keep no Alumnus from sending something every year to the treasurer, Dr. Malcolm Storer, 5 Brimmer Street, Boston.

A CENTRE OF LIFE IN THE MEDICAL SCHOOL.

A long-felt and urgent need of the Alumni and students has been a place about the School for men to get together, a place comfortable and attractive enough to invite use. This need was taken into consideration in planning the new buildings, and two fine large rooms in the Administration Building were set aside for the purpose. Even before the occupancy of the buildings a committee of the students began the work of collecting funds with which to furnish the rooms. This work could not be accomplished at once, because there was much needed, and it was recognized that nothing but thoroughly good furniture could be placed in the rooms.

Each year, however, progress has been made, so that with the instalment of rugs and furniture already ordered, and with the completion of large window-seats and additional bookcases which the Building Committee has promised, the large room under the amphitheatre will be very comfortable. This room is 54 feet long by 35 in width, so that, in addition to serving as a general club-room, it is well adapted to the use of alumni or student gatherings when occasion demands.

Gifts from a number of Alumni have already formed the nucleus of a library in connection with the rooms. While this library is not expected ever to be used for reference in the sense of the departmental libraries in the School, it is hoped that it may very soon contain at least the collateral reading in the various courses and other works of daily use by the students.

Already appreciation of the library and club-room idea has been shown by the abundant use which is daily made of the rooms. The work for the future will be to furnish the smaller room, which will be reserved as a study-room, and to build up the library. A few large suitable pictures are needed for both rooms. The enterprise is being financed by the Students' Library Association, the funds coming entirely by voluntary contribution, mainly from the students in the School. A number of Alumni have contributed liberally both of funds and of books. It is to be hoped that the generous spirit will continue.

CONSTITUTION OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

ARTICLE I.

The name of this Association shall be the "Harvard Medical Alumni Association."

ARTICLE II.

The objects of this Association shall be to advance the cause of medical education, to promote the interests and increase the usefulness of the Harvard Medical School, and to promote acquaintance and good-fellowship among the members of the Association.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. All graduates of the Harvard Medical School are eligible to be and may become members, if approved by the Council.

SECT. 2. By recommendation of the Council and by a two-thirds vote of the Society at any regular meeting, any member may be dropped.

SECT. 3. Every member shall pay an initiation fee of one dollar, and an annual due thereafter of one dollar; but any member may become a life member by the payment of twenty dollars in one payment, after which he shall be relieved from the payment of all dues.

SECT. 4. All physicians who have received any honorary degree from Harvard University shall be ipso facto honorary members of the Association. Honorary members may also be elected by this Association on nomination by the Council.

ARTICLE IV.

The officers of the Association shall be a President, ten Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, and a Council of fifteen members. The President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members of the Council.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. The President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be elected for the term of three years.

SECT. 2. The members of the Council, not members ex officio, shall be elected in classes as follows: at the first meeting of the Association, three members of the Council shall be elected for the term of four years, three members for the term of three years, three members for the term of two years, and three members for the term of one year; and thereafter, at the annual meeting of the Association in each year, three members shall be elected for the full term of four years, to fill the places of those whose term of office shall then have expired.

SEPT. 3. Vacancies occurring in any of the offices before the expiration of the respective terms shall be filled at the annual meeting next following the occurrence of such vacancies. The Council shall have the power to fill a vacancy in the offices of Secretary or Treasurer for the remainder of the current year.

SECT. 4. All officers of the Association shall hold their respective offices during the regular term thereof, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

ARTICLE VI.

The annual meeting of the Association shall be held at Boston, Massachusetts, on the Tuesday preceding the annual Commencement of Harvard College; provided, however, that the Council shall have the power to appoint in any year a different time and place for the annual meeting, if deemed expedient.

ARTICLE VII.

The President or the Council shall have the power to call a special meeting of the Association at any time, provided that at least two weeks' previous notice be given to all members of the Association.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. The executive power of the Association shall be vested in the Council, subject to the control and direction of the Association.

SECT. 2. The Council shall have the power to elect from its own members an Executive Committee of not less than three members, to whom may be delegated such powers as the Council shall deem expedient.

SECT. 3. The Council shall elect every year from its own members or from the Association a "Committee on the Harvard Medical School," and may elect such other committees from its own members or the Association at large as it shall, from time to time, deem expedient to carry out the objects of the Association.

SECT. 4. The Council shall have the power to appoint, from time to time, one or more Corresponding Secretaries in the different cities or towns of the United States and the British North American provinces. It shall be the duty and office of such Corresponding Secretaries to promote in their respective localities the objects and interests of the Association.

SECT. 5. The Council shall have the power to fix the number of members of the Association necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of any and all business save that of amending the Constitution, and to fix also the number of their own members necessary to constitute a quorum of the Council.

ARTICLE IX.

The Secretary, Treasurer, the Council, and the Committee on the Harvard Medical School shall make and submit to the Association, at its annual meeting in each year, reports in writing or print of their respective doings for the preceding year.

ARTICLE X.

This Constitution may be amended by a majority vote of all the members of the Association present at the annual meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, notice of such amendment having been given in the call for the meeting.

CONSTITUTION OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION.

ARTICLE I.

The name of this Association shall be the "Harvard Medical Alumni Association."

ARTICLE II.

The objects of this Association shall be to advance the cause of medical education, to promote the interests and increase the usefulness of the Harvard Medical School, and to promote acquaintance and good-fellowship among the members of the Association.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. All graduates of the Harvard Medical School are eligible to be and may become members, if approved by the Council.

SECT. 2. By recommendation of the Council and by a two-thirds vote of the Society at any regular meeting, any member may be dropped.

SECT. 3. Every member shall pay an initiation fee of one dollar, and an annual due thereafter of one dollar; but any member may become a life member by the payment of twenty dollars in one payment, after which he shall be relieved from the payment of all dues.

SECT. 4. All physicians who have received any honorary degree from Harvard University shall be ipso facto honorary members of the Association. Honorary members may also be elected by this Association on nomination by the Council.

ARTICLE IV.

The officers of the Association shall be a President, ten Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, and a Council of fifteen members. The President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be ex-officio members of the Council.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. The President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be elected for the term of three years.

SECT. 2. The members of the Council, not members ex officio, shall be elected in classes as follows: at the first meeting of the Association, three members of the Council shall be elected for the term of four years, three members for the term of three years, three members for the term of two years, and three members for the term of one year; and thereafter, at the annual meeting of the Association in each year, three members shall be elected for the full term of four years, to fill the places of those whose term of office shall then have expired.

SECT. 3. Vacancies occurring in any of the offices before the expiration of the respective terms shall be filled at the annual meeting next following the occurrence of such vacancies. The Council shall have the power to fill a vacancy in the offices of Secretary or Treasurer for the remainder of the current year.

SECT. 4. All officers of the Association shall hold their respective offices during the regular term thereof, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

ARTICLE VI.

The annual meeting of the Association shall be held at Boston, Massachusetts, on the Tuesday preceding the annual Commencement of Harvard College; provided, however, that the Council shall have the power to appoint in any year a different time and place for the annual meeting, if deemed expedient.

ARTICLE VII.

The President or the Council shall have the power to call a special meeting of the Association at any time, provided that at least two weeks' previous notice be given to all members of the Association.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. The executive power of the Association shall be vested in the Council, subject to the control and direction of the Association.

SECT. 2. The Council shall have the power to elect from its own members an Executive Committee of not less than three members, to whom may be delegated such powers as the Council shall deem expedient.

SECT. 3. The Council shall elect every year from its own members or from the Association a "Committee on the Harvard Medical School," and may elect such other committees from its own members or the Association at large as it shall, from time to time, deem expedient to carry out the objects of the Association.

SECT. 4. The Council shall have the power to appoint, from time to time, one or more Corresponding Secretaries in the different cities or towns of the United States and the British North American provinces. It shall be the duty and office of such Corresponding Secretaries to promote in their respective localities the objects and interests of the Association.

SECT. 5. The Council shall have the power to fix the number of members of the Association necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of any and all business save that of amending the Constitution, and to fix also the number of their own members necessary to constitute a quorum of the Council.

ARTICLE IX.

The Secretary, Treasurer, the Council, and the Committee on the Harvard Medical School shall make and submit to the Association, at its annual meeting in each year, reports in writing or print of their respective doings for the preceding year.

ARTICLE X.

This Constitution may be amended by a majority vote of all the members of the Association present at the annual meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, notice of such amendment having been given in the call for the meeting.

ARTICLE IV.

The officers of the Association shall be a President, ten Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, and a Council of fifteen members. The President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be ex officio members of the Council.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. The President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be elected for the term of three years.

SECT. 2. The members of the Council, not members ex officio, shall be elected in classes as follows: at the first meeting of the Association, three members of the Council shall be elected for the term of four years, three members for the term of three years, three members for the term of two years, and three members for the term of one year; and thereafter, at the annual meeting of the Association in each year, three members shall be elected for the full term of four years, to fill the places of those whose term of office shall then have expired.

SECT. 3. Vacancies occurring in any of the offices before the expiration of the respective terms shall be filled at the annual meeting next following the occurrence of such vacancies. The Council shall have the power to fill a vacancy in the offices of Secretary or Treasurer for the remainder of the current year.

SECT. 4. All officers of the Association shall hold their respective offices during the regular term thereof, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

ARTICLE VI.

The annual meeting of the Association shall be held at Boston, Massachusetts, on the Tuesday preceding the annual Commencement of Harvard College; provided, however, that the Council shall have the power to appoint in any year a different time and place for the annual meeting, if deemed expedient.

ARTICLE VII.

The President or the Council shall have the power to call a special meeting of the Association at any time, provided that at least two weeks previous notice be given to all members of the Association.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. The executive power of the Association shall be vested in the Council, subject to the control and direction of the Association.

SECT. 2. The Council shall have the power to elect from its own members an Executive Committee of not less than three members, to whom may be delegated such powers as the Council shall deem expedient.

SECT. 3. The Council shall elect every year from its own members or from the Association a "Committee on the Harvard Medical School," and may elect such other committees from its own members or the Association at large as it shall, from time to time, deem expedient to carry out the objects of the Association.

SECT. 4. The Council shall have the power to appoint, from time to time, one or more Corresponding Secretaries in the different cities or towns of the United States and the British North American provinces. It shall be the duty and office of such Corresponding Secretaries to promote in their respective localities the objects and interests of the Association.

SECT. 5. The Council shall have the power to fix the number of the members of the Association necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of any and all business save that of amending the Constitution, and to fix also the number of their own members necessary to constitute a quorum of the Council.

ARTICLE IX.

The Secretary, Treasurer, the Council and the Committee on the Harvard Medical School shall make and submit to the Association, at its annual meeting in each year, reports in writing or print of their respective doings for the preceding year.

ARTICLE X.

The Constitution may be amended by a majority vote of all the members of the Association present at the annual meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, notice of such amendment having been given in the call for the meeting.

CONSTITUTION OF THE HARVARD MEDICAL ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

ARTICLE I.

The name of this Association shall be the "Harvard Medical Alumni Association."

ARTICLE II.

The objects of this Association shall be to advance the cause of medical education, to promote the interests and increase the usefulness of the Harvard Medical School, and to promote acquaintance and good-fellowship among the members of the Association.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. All graduates of the Harvard Medical School are eligible to be and may become members, if approved by the Council.

SECT. 2. By recommendation of the Council and by a two-thirds vote of the Society at any regular meeting, any member may be dropped.

SECT. 3. Every member shall pay an initiation fee of one dollar, and an annual due thereafter of one dollar; but any member may become a life member by the payment of twenty dollars in one payment, after which he shall be relieved from the payment of all dues.

SECT. 4. All physicians who have received any honorary degree from Harvard University shall be ipso facto honorary members of the Association. Honorary members may also be elected by this Association on nomination by the Council.

the Council shall have the power to appoint in any year a different time and place for the annual meeting, if deemed expedient.

ARTICLE VII.

The President or the Council shall have the power to call a special meeting of the Association at any time, provided that at least two weeks previous notice be given to all members of the Association.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION I. The executive power of the Association shall be vested in the Council, subject to the control and direction of the Association.

SECT. 2. The Council shall have the power to elect from its own members an Executive Committee of not less than three members, to whom may be delegated such powers as the Council shall deem expedient.

SECT. 3. The Council shall elect every year from its own members or from the Association a "Committee on the Harvard Medical School," and may elect such other committees from its own members or the Association at large as it shall, from time to time, deem expedient to carry out the objects of the Association.

SECT. 4. The Council shall have the power to appoint, from time to time, one or more Corresponding Secretaries in the different cities or towns of the United States and the British North American provinces. It shall be the duty and office of such Corresponding Secretaries to promote in their respective localities the objects and interests of the Association.

SECT. 5. The Council shall have the power to fix the number of the members of the Association necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of any and all business save that of amending the Constitution, and to fix also the number of their own members necessary to constitute a quorum of the Council.

ARTICLE IX.

The Secretary, Treasurer, the Council, and the Committee on the Harvard Medical School shall make and submit to the Association, at its annual meeting in each year, reports in writing or print of their respective doings for the preceding year.

ARTICLE X.

The Constitution may be amended by a majority vote of all the members of the Association present at the annual meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, notice of such amendment having been given in the call for the meeting.

ARTICLE IV.

The officers of the Association shall be a President, ten Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, an Assistant Secretary, a Treasurer, and a Council of fifteen members. The President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be ex officio members of the Council.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. The President, Vice-Presidents, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be elected for the term of three years.

SECT. 2. The members of the Council, not members ex officio, shall be elected in classes as follows: at the first meeting of the Association, three members of the Council shall be elected for the term of four years, three members for the term of three years, three members for the term of two years, and three members for the term of one year; and thereafter, at the annual meeting of the Association in each year, three members shall be elected for the full term of four years, to fill the places of those whose term of office shall then have expired.

SECT. 3. Vacancies occurring in any of the offices before the expiration of the respective terms shall be filled at the annual meeting next following the occurrence of such vacancies. The Council shall have the power to fill a vacancy in the offices of Secretary or Treasurer for the remainder of the current year.

SECT. 4. All officers of the Association shall hold their respective offices during the regular term thereof, and until their successors shall be elected and qualified.

ARTICLE VI.

The annual meeting of the Association shall be held at Boston, Massachusetts, on the Tuesday preceding the annual Commencement of Harvard College; provided, however, that the Council shall have the power to appoint in any year a different time and place for the annual meeting, if deemed expedient.

ARTICLE VII.

The President or the Council shall have the power to call a special meeting of the Association at any time, provided that at least two weeks previous notice be given to all members of the Association.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. The executive power of the Association shall be vested in the Council, subject to the control and direction of the Association.

SECT. 2. The Council shall have the power to elect from its own members an Executive Committee of not less than three members, to whom may be delegated such powers as the Council shall deem expedient.

SECT. 3. The Council shall elect every year from its own members or from the Association a "Committee on the Harvard Medical School," and may elect such other committees from its own members or the Association at large as it shall, from time to time, deem expedient to carry out the objects of the Association.

SECT. 4. The Council shall have the power to appoint, from time to time, one or more Corresponding Secretaries in the different cities or towns of the United States and the British North American provinces. It shall be the duty and office of such Corresponding Secretaries to promote in their respective localities the objects and interests of the Association.

SECT. 5. The Council shall have the power to fix the number of the members of the Association necessary to constitute a quorum for the transaction of any and all business save that of amending the Constitution, and to fix also the number of their own members necessary to constitute a quorum of the Council.

ARTICLE IX.

The Secretary, Treasurer, the Council, and the Committee on the Harvard Medical School shall make and submit to the Association, at its annual meeting in each year, reports in writing or print of their respective doings for the preceding year.

ARTICLE X.

The Constitution may be amended by a majority vote of all the members of the Association present at the annual meeting, or at any special meeting called for that purpose, notice of such amendment having been given in the call for the meeting.
